Résumé	Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55 déposé en mai 1987.

Introduction

The Canadian Research Index - Microlog puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. Canadian Research Index in print is a monthly indexing and abstracting service. An electronic version on CD-ROM or via the Internet is also available. Microlog represents our fulltext document service. Most titles included in Canadian Research Index are available in paper as well as microfiche format. Together, these services are a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications.

The Canadian Research Index includes scientific and technical research papers in physical, natural and social sciences. It also includes policy papers, important statistical publications, and annual reports.

Documents issued in English or French are catalogued, indexed and abstracted in the language of the publication, while bilingual documents are catalogued, indexed and abstracted in both languages.

Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by the Microlog Service approximately two months after publication of the list.

- government publications from the federal, provincial and municipal levels
- depository publications of reference value
- non-depository publications issued by government organizations, laboratories and research centres
- non-profit organizations, educational institutions and research groups
- some monographs and serials issued by Statistics Canada

ORGANIZATION

Canadian Research Index comprises the following sections:

Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.

Corporate name index: Access by controlled format corporate names based on Canadiana Authorities.

Personal name index: Access by personal name.

Subject index: Subject terms based on Library of Congress and Canadian Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.

Series titles: Lists by title and numbers all reports in a series; series are available as an on-going subscription or retrospective collection.

Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions.

ELECTRONIC ACCESS

The full Canadian Research Index file from 1982 to date is available in electronic formats on the SilverPlatter SPIRS platform. It is accessible on CD; it may be licensed for network use on a local server or on a SilverPlatter ERL server; and it is available for Internet subscription. Reports may be ordered through the National Technical Information Service in the U.S.A., or directly through IHS/Micromedia's Global Information Centre. Introduction

Microlog : Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. L'Index de recherche du Canada imprimé est un service mensuel d'indexation et de résumés. Une version électronique est également offerte sur CD-ROM ou dans Internet. Microlog représente notre service de documents en texte intégral. La plupart des titres figurant dans l'Index sont disponibles sous forme imprimée et sur microfiche. Ces services combinés constituent un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada.

L'Index contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels.

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

De vastes efforts sont déployés pour assurer la pertinence de l'index. Par exemple, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

- publications fédérales, provinciales et municipales
- publications déposées servant de référence
- publications non déposées publiées par les organismes gouvernementaux, les laboratoires et les centres de recherche
- publications d'organismes à but non lucratif, d'établissements d'enseignement et de groupes de recherche
- certaines monographies et publication en série publiées par Statistique Canada

Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur.

Index des matières: des descripteurs fondés sur les vedettes matières des documents Library of Congress Subject Headings et Canadian Subject Headings sont associés à chaque publication; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.

Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces documents sont disponibles par le biais d'un abonnement permanent et ils sont aussi intégrés à une collection rétrospective.

Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés.

Sample CRI Search

"How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?"

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

"Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?"

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

Ce livre veut sensibiliser le lecteur à l'immense activité et au drame qui se sont déroulés à la Grosse-Île en 1847. C'est pourquoi on a choisi de présenter les informations sous une forme toute simple, celle d'un journal. Ainsi, au fil des jours, on prendra d'abord connaissance du rythme des arrivées des émigrants et de la cadence à laquelle les navires ont été autorisés à poursuivre leur route vers le port de Québec. Ce document présente un journal des faits survenus à la Grosse-Île. Il est précédé d'une introduction-synthèse qui résume les principales phases événementielles de cette si longue saison. Abundance, age, size, sex and coded wire tag recoveries for chinook salmon escapement of Kitsumkalum River, 1995

(Canadian manuscript report of fisheries and aquatic sciences / Canada. Dept. of Fisheries & Oceans ; no. 2405 ISSN 0706-6473) CCG-P no. Fs 97-4/2405E MICROLOG 97-05959 (1 fiche)

This report is part of a series describing the escapement monitoring and biological sampling of chinook in the Kitsumkalum River. The escapement of chinook salmon was calculated using the adjusted Petersen method by tagging live chinook in situ and recovering carcasses. Separate population estimates were calculated for each sex for both the upper and lower sections of the river. A total estimate for the in-river escapement of chinook was calculated by summing the individual estimates. In this report potential biases in the Petersen method, the live tagging approach, and the method of stratification are discussed. Assumptions for the methods used and the tests for biases caused by violations of assumptions are also described in the methods section. The results section presents the population estimates, tests for bias in tagging and recovery, population composition and the results of coded wire tagging studies. The results are then discussed with respect to previous studies.

This report provides a context in which to place distributed learning, one in which access to education and training has been denied due to such factors as family responsibilities, employment needs, geographic location, or physical ability. The report focuses on the ability of distributed learning environments to provide new and promising approaches to the teaching/learning process, and makes recommendations for delivery of distributed learning in British Columbia. Recommendations and their rationale are presented with regard to equitable access, enhancement of learning quality, partnerships, resources, and restructuring.

The Accumulation of technology : a cross-cohort longitudinal analysis of recent engineering graduates

By Ross Finnie and Marie Lavoie. Hull, PQ : Human Resources Development Canada, Strategic Policy, Applied Research Branch, 1996. xvii, 130 p. : Ill., Bibl. (Working papers / Canada. Human Resources Development Canada ; W-96-10E) MICROLOG 97-05784 (2 fiche)

This research examines the school to work transition and early career patterns of recent engineering graduates, using three cohorts of the National Graduates Survey. The first section summarizes the theoretical approach developed by the evolutionary school of economists regarding the nature of technology, the relation between technology and economic growth, and the prominent place held by engineers in these dynamics. A brief survey of the Canadian industrial landscape is then offered, particularly as it pertains to technology, to provide the framework for the theoretical analysis that follows. The paper then describes the National Graduates Surveys and the treatment of their data in this research. This is followed by the empirical results, which encompass two major themes: the career of recent engineering graduates, and the use which the economy makes of its engineering graduates, especially in terms of the use of the skills developed while in school, the continuing evolution of those skill bases, and mobility patterns. Comparisons with other graduates are also made: those with pure science degrees, those from the social sciences, and all non-engineering graduates taken together.

L'objectif premier de cette étude est de remettre les secteurs de biens et de services en perspective. S'il est possible que la croissance accélérée du secteur des services soit due à une saturation des agents économiques pour la consommation des biens et à un appétit grandissant pour les services; Il est également possible qu'elle soit due à un effet d'entraînement du secteur des biens sur le secteur des services. Le deuxième objectif de cette étude est de comparer la contribution à l'économie canadienne de sept ressources naturelles en terme de revenu et d'emplois en tenant compte des effets directs et indirects. Si les études intersectorielles sont fréquemment mises à jour pour un secteur de l'économie, il est moins fréquent de voir la contribution de différents secteurs évaluée dans un même cadre d'analyse. Les sections 2 à 6 de cette étude tentent de pallier m cette lacune à l'aide du modèle intersectoriel national de 1985. CA CO ND SS

Examines the age structure of Canadian unemployment, using 1991 Census data and calculating representational indices which reveal how the age distribution of workers in industrial and occupational groups compares to that of the employed labour force as a whole. This type of analysis provides a useful basis for understanding a number of labour market phenomena including segmentation, life cycle patterns, employment structure, and future demand requirements. In the context of the recent labour market experiences by age group, the age composition of employment is explored, looking first at the potential determinants of the age structure of an industry or occupation and then at the different types of age distribution patterns. The empirical analysis follows and is interpreted in light of future supply and demand projections. Policy implications are also briefly discussed. CA LA ND SS ST

Medical studies indicate such particles are associated with a variety of health effects ranging from severe coughing to premature deaths. The particles originate from both natural sources and human activities. BC Environment has monitored airborne concentrations of these particles at nearly 100 sites since the mid-1980s. This report is the first overview of fine airborne particle measurements made across the province. The assessment is limited to 1990-95 data and primarily to those sites exhibiting good data availability. Information is included on sampling methodology, quality assurance procedures, measures of air quality, and the evaluation of fine airborne particle levels. Results are presented and discussed by region and trends are noted.

An Analysis of the Japanese demand for wood products by type, species and source

By Christopher W. Gaston. Victoria : Natural Resources Canada, Canadian Forest Service, Pacific Forestry Centre, 1997. xiii, 96 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II ; WP 97.02) MICROLOG 97-05990 (2 fiche)

This study focuses on quantifying the degree of wood product substitution in Japan, a market chosen for the following reasons: it is the largest importer of forest products, and the second most important market for British Columbia; it has a history of evolving from reliance on domestic production to importation of processed wood products, creating a good case study for quantifying the substitution between wood products; and it has been a significant buyer of both construction- and appearance-grade wood products. After an introduction on the background to the study, this report reviews the market for wood products in Japan, including domestic timber resources and production, imports, and domestic processing of domestic and imported wood. It then analyses Japanese demand for wood products by type of product (logs, lumber, and panel products, both hardwood and softwood), species, and source (domestic versus imported). Three separate methodologies are employed for comparison, and demand elasticities for the products are estimated. Implications of the results for British Columbia wood product marketing and forest policy are discussed. The appendix includes a literature review on log and lumber substitutions.

By Jonathan R. Kesselman and W. Craig Riddell. Hull, PQ : Human Resources Development Canada, Strategic Policy, Applied Research Branch, 1991. 130 p. : Ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Canada. Human Resources Development Canada ; R-95-5) MICROLOG 97-05873 (2 fiche)

This study examines alternative formats that could be used for the subsidy treatment in the Self-Sufficiency Project (SSP), an experimental program of work-related subsidies intended to get social assistance recipients back into employment. Three principal subsidy formats are considered: an earnings subsidy, a negative income tax with a work requirement, and a wage rate subsidy. The analysis emphasizes types of considerations useful in guiding the design of the SSP experiment against a rigorously formal treatment. The study reviews the formats' definition, budget constraints, and effective tax and subsidy rates; benefit levels and other parameters needed for each format to dominate current social assistance entitlements; the interrelations between the SSP subsidy and major provisions of existing taxes and transfers, and implications for effective marginal tax rates; labour supply behaviour under the alternative formats; and format design dimensions. The relevance of the SSP subsidy formats to broader policy applications is also discussed.

The aim of this study is to measure the development of Atlantic Canada in comparison to that of the 50 US states. The measurements employ 58 criteria originally devised by the Corporation for Enterprise Development to measure the relative development of the US states. Of the 58 criteria, 44 are used to grade each state on three indices for economic performance, business vitality, and development capacity. The other 14 are used in two ungraded indices for tax and fiscal systems and for environmental, social, and health conditions. Each graded index also has a number of sub-indices measuring such matters as employment, competitiveness, human resources, and business amenities and infrastructure. The results allow regional decision makers to assess key indicators of growth and to evaluate the advantages and weaknesses of the regional economy.

Both exchange-rate targeting and inflation targeting problems concern a monetary authority faced with the task of maintaining an economic variable between some pre-specified bounds. This paper selectively reviews the literature on exchange rate target zones and corresponding methodologies, and examines whether they can be used to analyze the inflation control problem. After an introductory section, this paper summarizes the first generation of exchange rate target-zone models. In an attempt to reconcile the poor empirical performance of the basic model, section 3 discusses extensions of Krugman (1991). Section 4 considers the symmetry between target zones for inflation and for the exchange rate. Finally, section 5 includes an outline of the implications for modelling inflation-target zones.

Describes and presents findings of a three-year study of the recovery of sea-bottom animal communities from the effects of net-pen salmon aquaculture. Investigators sampled eight recently fallow aquaculture sites in British Columbia in 1991-92, continued sampling at four of those sites in 1993, and performed a final round of sampling at three of the sites exhibiting the slowest recovery. The central product of the sampling and analysis of the sites is an identification, enumeration, and biomass by species of benthic macrofauna, augmented by determinations of sediment characteristics including measures of organic accumulation, water quality profiles, and current measurements. The study describes the rate and mechanisms of return toward the natural condition following removal of overlying net-pen operations, relating these to environmental factors such as bottom type, intensity of use, and current velocity. The study also developed practical measures of benthic environmental status in the vicinity of net-pen operations. BC EV FI LS PR SC

Soil conservation and stabilization techniques long used in Europe are being rediscovered and improved for use in streambank restoration. In this review, the different uses of plants in hydraulic and geotechnical engineering design are presented. A comprehensive overview of biological, ecological, and technical considerations for the use of plants in engineering construction is given in five chapters, including a brief introduction with general definitions and goals of biotechnical construction methods, the ecological role of riparian vegetation, and attempts to quantify the impact of plants on stream hydraulics and bank stability. The core of the review is a comprehensive discussion of the most important biotechnical construction methods used in river training and stream enhancement in central Europe. Methods, construction procedures, and major advantages and drawbacks of these methods are detailed, with information on such structures as fascines, layer structures, crib walls, vegetated gabions and pallsades, groynes, reed structures, and transversal structures. The review concludes with sections on maintenance of stream banks and on the construction and maintenance costs of biotechnical structures. BC NR PR SC

The Ontario government has experimented with various administrative arrangements to provide services and programs for the people and industries of northern Ontario. This paper provides a historical overview of the development of provincial government administration in northern Ontario, beginning with the creation of the Northern Development Branch of the Dept. of Lands, Mines & Resources in 1912, a year when the province acquired the Patricia District and thereby expanded its borders northward significantly. It then describes the merger of the Northern Affairs Branch with the Dept. of Mines in 1970, the establishment of the Ministry of Northern Affairs in 1977, and finally the present Ministry of Northern Development & Mines. The paper concludes by charting the growth of that Ministry and highlighting some of the larger programs undertaken over the past 20 years. ON PA PR SS

By George K. Wama, Linda Nichol and John Ford. Victoria : Environmental Assessment Office, 1997. 85 p. : Maps, Bibl. MICROLOG 97-05740 (1 fiche)

One of the main causes of production losses in the British Columbia salmon farming industry is predation-related losses of fish. Some measures taken by fish farmers to control predation by marine and coastal animals may affect the health and normal migration patterns of marine mammals and possibly other species. This discussion paper reviews the interaction between intensive salmon aquaculture and other animals, with emphasis on the interaction with aquatic mammals (in particular seals, otters, sea lions, and whales). Interactions with sharks, fish, birds, invertebrates, and other animals are also discussed. The paper describes the animals and the nature of their interaction with salmon farming activities in British Columbia and in other areas of the world, as well as the effects of such activities as the use of acoustic deterrent devices, nets, guns, and photostimulation. Typical characteristics of British Columbia vehicles are presented, followed by documentation of the calibration of the ARFCOM and HDM-III free-flow models. The model takes into account vehicle operating speed, fuel and oil consumption, tire consumption, maintenance labour and parts, and capital costs (depreciation and interest). Results are presented for free-flow costs on different kinds of roads (paved, gravel), for costs versus operating speed, and for fuel and energy consumption. Preliminary work on an impeded-flow and urban traffic vehicle operating cost model is then reviewed. Concludes with discussion of application of the cost models, their uncertainty and accuracy, and their updating procedures. Appendices include tables of vehicle characteristics.

Presents results of work in progress to enhance the Canadian Occupational Projection System (COPS) methodological framework so that it becomes a more powerful tool for generating labour market information and assistance in policy analysis. Provides an overview of the new analytical framework, of the data sources being used, and of the revised set of models currently being implemented in COPS. The new framework accounts for both the supply and demand sides of the labour market, embodying a more complete picture of the labour market than current COPS models which focus on the demand side. By matching labour demand with labour supply, an indicator of the future labour market conditions can be constructed for each occupation using the new COPS framework. Future work to further improve COPS is also outlined.

Develops a new model for estimating variable occupation by industry coefficients for the Canadian Occupational Projection System (COPS) Demand Model. Occupational coefficients are the share of employment in an industry accounted for by each occupation. The goals of this project were to strengthen the theoretical foundations of the existing model and to explicitly take into account the impact of the business cycle on the occupational coefficients. The development steps involved identification of cyclical occupational coefficients, identification of cyclical occupations, and using two types of procedures (one for cyclical and one for non-cyclical industries) to estimate a new model of coefficients. Results are presented for the integration of the new coefficients into the COPS model, indicating whether reasonable projections were obtained.

Section 6 brings the previous two sections together, using a series of indicators, to describe prospective labour market conditions by occupation and level of study over 1995-2000. The final section draws some conclusions from the analysis and discusses possible areas for further improvement in the COPS model.

Demand for higher quality limestone and expansion in limestone applications has increased the importance of effective prospecting for undiscovered deposits and of prudent management and evaluation of known deposits. This report presents a compilation of data on New Brunswick Carboniferous limestone deposits, beginning with a brief review of previous research. It then reviews the general geologic setting and geographic distribution of limestone deposits in the province, followed by detailed descriptions of deposits in the Horton Group (Albert Formation), Windsor Group, and Plaster Rock Formation. Where available, information is included on deposit geology, exploration and development, and evaluation of commercial potential. Finally, an attempt is made to classify and rate selected deposits according to parameters considered useful in a general assessment of development potential.

While a revolutionary outcome is unlikely, there are both evolutionary and devolutionary tendencies in the country's transition process. At the same time, important continuities with the past, such as a strong presidency, have a stabilizing effect on Mexico's path forward. Presents and analyzes cross-tabulated data from the 1988 National Child Care Survey, focusing on the main demographic, labour force, and income characteristics of female lone parents with preschool children. Also analyzes their child care use patterns, expenditures on child care, and self-declared sensitivity to changes in child care price. All of these are compared to mothers of preschoolers in two-parent families. The study also compares the rates of satisfaction with current child care arrangements, child care preferences, problems with and work effects of child care, and annual turnover of child care arrangements of these lone parent mothers to similarly situated mothers in two-parent families. A modelling strategy is proposed for estimating the separate impact of various factors (particularly those currently or potentially influenced by child care, child benefit, taxation, and social assistance policies) on the participation of lone parents in the labour force and their decisions to use different types of child care. A regression analysis based on this strategy attempts to explain the employment, child care, and social assistance decisions of lone parent mothers, in conjunction with statistical tests of the regression parameters. Child poverty trends in Canada : exploring depth and incidence from a total money income perspective, 1975 to 1992

By Myles Zyblock. Hull, PQ : Human Resources Development Canada, Strategic Policy, Applied Research Branch, 1996. v, 29 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working papers / Canada. Human Resources Development Canada ; W-96-1E) French ed. (La Pauvreté des enfants...) on the same fiche. MICROLOG 97-05780 (1 fiche)

This paper has two objectives. The first objective is to describe the trends in child poverty incidence and depth in Canada from 1975 to 1992. The second objective is to assess the extent to which the trends in poverty incidence are associated with changing family structure. In Section II, we present a brief survey of recent literature addressing child poverty issues in Canada. Measurement issues and data concerns are discussed in Section III. In Section IV, we outline the trends in child poverty for all children and young children using two different poverty thresholds; first, we calculate the child poverty rate based on the 1986 Statistics Canada Low Income Cut-Off Line (LICO) annually updated for the change in the consumer price index; second, we calculate child poverty rates based on a threshold that is 65 percent of the annual 1986 LICO updated for changes in the consumer price index. Section V considers the depth of poverty for families with children based on the poverty thresholds discussed in Section IV. An accounting model is developed in Section VI to assess the relative magnitudes of changing proportions of children living in two-parent and lone parent families over time and the within-group risk of poverty on overall child poverty rates. Section VII provides concluding comments. CA ND SA SS

Children in Canada in the 1990s : overview

By David P. Ross, Katherine Scott and Mark A. Kelly. Hull, PQ : Human Resources Development Canada, Strategic Policy, Applied Research Branch, 1996. iii, 50 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Canada. Human Resources Development Canada ; R-97-2E) MICROLOG 97-05885 (1 fiche)

The National Longitudinal Survey of Children and Youth (NLSCY) follows a representative sample of over 22,000 children from across Canada and provides a unique opportunity to study the progress of children from infancy to adulthood. This research paper provides an overview of the first release of NLSCY data representing 1994-95. The first part of the paper presents a profile of Canadian children: who they were, where they lived, and how they were faring (health status, behaviour, education, social relationships, child care arrangements). The next part turns to the status of families in Canada and the dynamics of family life, including information on family types, age of parents, socio-economic status, family relationships, and social supports. The final section explores the potential of the NLSCY by linking selected environmental variables such as household income to child outcomes such as social development. These cross-tabulations are suggestive of what might be the most productive lines of research to pursue in the effort to better understand the complexities of child development. CA ND SA SS ST

China : environmental stress and national security

By Robert T. Stranks and Nicolino Strizzi. Ottawa : Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade, 1996. 54 p. : Bibl. (Policy staff paper / Canada. (La Chine : stress environnemental...)* : 97-06100/1. MICROLOG 97-06098 (1 fiche)

The first part of this paper develops a conceptual framework for facilitating the understanding of how environmental stress may contribute to violent conflict. It serves to highlight the case-specific nature of linkages between environmental stress and national security, the fact that conflict may be intra- or inter-state, the large number of variables influencing causation, and the anecdotal nature of empirical evidence on causation. The second part identifies and, where possible, elucidates the linkages between environmental stress and national security in the Chinese context. This section identifies population pressures, the most serious environmental problems, and Chinese policies to deal with those problems. Chinese economic growth strategies and the political setting are also discussed due to the interrelationship between environmental issues and economic development. Finally, the paper attempts to draw some conclusions on the environmental stress/violent conflict nexus in China. CA EV EX ND SS

Ce document vise à appliquer à la Chine un cadre analytique fondé sur les liens entre le stress environnemental et la sécurité nationale. Ces liens intéressent de plus en plus les décideurs et le public. Pour les comprendre, il faut distinguer entre le stress environnemental, c'est-à-dire les effets environnementaux négatifs, et le phénomène, plus général mais étroitement apparenté, de la rareté des ressources. Dans la première partie du document, un cadre conceptuel est développé qui permettra de mieux comprendre comment le stress environnemental peut contribuer à l'avènement d'un conflit violent. La seconde partie identifie, et explique là où c'est possible, les liens entre le stress environnemental et la sécurité nationale dans le contexte chinois. CA EV EX ND SS

Pour de nombreux jeunes (groupe d'âge 15 à 24 ans), la transition entre l'école et le travail signifie qu'ils arrivent sur le marché du travail sans spécialité, sans expérience, et sans être habitués à la recherche d'un emploi ni au courant des possibilités d'emploi qui s'offrent à eux. En conséquence, nombreux sont ceux pour qui le chômage est la première expérience du marché du travail. Malgré l'intérêt assez marqué que l'on porte au taux de chômage, on parle rarement de la nature et des causes du chômage. Dans ce document, nous cherchons à combler cette lacune, en ce qui a trait au chômage actuel chez les jeunes. CA DE ED LA SS

Depuis quelques décennies, une quantité énorme de travaux théoriques et empiriques portent sur l'explication de la montée persistante du chômage, en particulier dans le contexte des pays d'Europe occidentale. Malgré cet effort, les facteurs structurels les plus pertinents sont loin de faire l'unanimité. Une bonne part des recherches sont axées sur les données globales des séries chronologiques, souvent au moyen de comparaisons entre les pays. Ce document vise à aller au-delà des données globales sur les séries chronologiques, afin de découvrir d'autres évolutions importantes du marché du travail qui sont survenues au Canada pendant l'après-guerre. Le document souligne un certain nombre de faits saillants liés au chômage structurel. CA LA ND SS

The collected essays in this book provide a comparative examination of the process of grassroots mobilization and the development of community-based forms of popular democracy in Central and South America. The first part contains studies from individual countries on organizations ranging from those supported by governments and integrated into the country's political structure to groups that were organized against the existing political system. The organizations studied included those focusing on a particular concern, such as housing, and those with wide responsibility for community affairs; but all were organizations based on common interests where people lived and, in some cases, where people worked. The second part offers theme studies on men, women and differential participation; problems and meanings associated with decentralization, especially in relation to devolution of power to the local level and the construction of popular alternatives; and the compelling theoretical paradigms of new social movements and resource mobilization.

This study analyzes the relative costs of doing business in 28 cities, 16 in Atlantic Canada and 12 in the United States. The analysis included the development of illustrative business scenarios, based on current tax rates, cost factors, and exchange rates, focusing on costs of establishing facilities in seven selected industries on 5-10 acre sites in suburban areas zoned for light to medium industrial purposes. A computer-based financial model was used to compare typical operating costs for those facilities from start-up to ten years of operation. Each facility was modelled on existing industry information. Location-sensitive cost factors examined included industrial land cost, construction costs, labour costs, electricity costs, transportation/distribution costs, interest, and taxes. Non-financial factors that should be considered in assessing the relative merits of locating in Atlantic Canada or the US are also analyzed briefly. Appendices include detailed profiles and cost comparison results for the Canadian cities and profiles (demographic, economic, community) of the US cities.

COPS : a revised demand side

By Daniel Boothby. Hull, PQ : Human Resources Development Canada, Strategic Policy, Applied Research Branch, 1995. 21 p. : ill. (Technical documents series / Canada. Human Resources Development Canada ; T-95-4) MICROLOG 97-05868 (1 fiche)

Describes the demand side methodology of the revised Canadian Occupational Projection System (COPS) model. On the demand side, the model estimates and projects the demand for hires of non-employed persons by occupations (the demand for newcomers). The components of this demand over the historical period are expansion demand (net job creation), net job changers, outflows from employment to non-employment, deaths, and emigration. Estimates of each component were made for each 3-digit Standard Occupational Classification occupation over 1983-93. The model was used to project replacement demand (the demand for newcomers minus net job changers plus departures to non-employment, plus deaths and emigration) as a proportion of the required employment over the projection period. The projected proportion was multiplied by projected employment requirements in the occupation to obtain a projected level of replacement demand for the occupation. Selected results are presented for components of demand for newcomers for two occupations. Possibilities for further development of the model are also discussed.

Describes the supply side methodology of the revised Canadian Occupational Projection System (COPS) model. On the supply side, the revised model provides estimates of the supply of non-employed persons to occupations. Three components of this supply are distinguished: the supply of previously employed persons, the supply of school leavers, and the supply of new immigrants. In the past, the COPS system had not taken into account all of these components. In the revised system, the flow of previously employed who remain available for employment is treated as supply to their last occupation. New immigrants are distributed to the labour force and among occupations on the basis of Census data. Selected results are presented showing the components of the supply of jobless persons to two selected occupations. Possibilities for further enhancements of the model are also discussed.

Counting the trees is not enough : measurement and projection of economic timber supply

Conventional methods of assessing and projecting timber supply are essentially measures of the physical dimensions of the resource. A more useful measure of timber supply can be obtained by considering the economic dimension of the forest inventory and the interaction of the biological and economic dynamics of the forest. This approach, implemented in the Price Responsive Timber Supply Model, is demonstrated in this paper for the North Coast Timber Supply Area in British Columbia. The results indicate the price sensitive nature of the economic dimension of Canadian timber resources and the degree of importance to future supplies of market prices and cost of inputs to harvesting, compared to conventional forestry processes of accruals and depletions.

La perte de production associée au chômage cyclique représente également des coûts budgétaires nets pour les gouvernements de $8 à $12 milliards. Contrairement aux analyses courantes à tendance économique de la crise du peso et de ses suites, Ce document présente une interprétation politico-économique de la situation mexicaine actuelle. Le document examine la direction des changements politiques actuels au Mexique. Bien qu'une issue révolutionnaire soit improbable, il existe dans le processus de transition des tendances à l'évolution aussi bien qu'à la décentralisation. Par ailleurs, des éléments de continuité avec le passé, comme une présidence forte, ont un effet stabilisateur sur l'avenir du Mexique. La dernière section porte sur les incidences de l'analyse du document pour le Canada. Quatre recommandations modestes y sont formulées.

Presents the versatile standard format developed for storing fisheries acoustic data acquired by various sensors. The format satisfies the following needs: accommodation of most echo sounders, single to multiple channels; variable data resolutions in time, space, and amplitude; efficiency and versatility in data storage and access; room for additions and future developments; forward and backward compatibility in time; self-contained files; forward and backward scrolling possibility within a file; and computer platform independence. The format is designed to preserve the raw data through as many data analysis steps as possible, including data editing and classification. File information is structured by tuples, defined as a structured group of bytes assigned to a particular type of information. Various tuple types required for standard fisheries acoustics and common echo sounders are defined in detail.

Design issues relating to the wage subsidy/Self-Sufficiency Project

The Self-Sufficiency Project (SSP) is a long-term experiment to test the use of temporary earnings supplements as a way of helping single parents leave income assistance for employment. This paper offers some advice on the design of the SSP, beginning with a summary of the SSP as currently envisaged. This is followed by a general discussion of design issues that affect the evaluation of any policy. A number of labour supply models, human capital acquisition models, wage models, and job matching models are reviewed to assess the effects that a supplement to earned income might have. Empirical evidence on earnings growth are also reviewed. The focus is on discussion of various features of the proposed SSP experiment, particularly in terms of the ability of the experiment to produce sound conclusions about the impacts of the policy adopted.

This study analyzes the 1994 Adult Education & Training Survey to estimate the incidence of employer-sponsored and non-employer-sponsored training among employees, and to explore the extent to which employer-sponsored training is affected by employee perceptions of the need for training. A brief literature review of Canadian training literature and an overview of the strengths of the 1994 Survey introduce the study. Examination of the issue of adequacy of employer-sponsored training focuses on long-term full-time employees. A complementary issue is unequal access to training by different groups of employees. The study then turns to the question of the importance of employee demand for training as a major determinant of the incidence of employer-sponsored training. Several indicators of employee demand for training are presented and their relative importance is measured using a regression model.

Investigates the down-payment affordability situation in Canada and examines the feasibility and desirability of developing a measurement of down-payment affordability. Begins with a literature review to determine the extent to which down payment has been identified as a serious constraint to home ownership. The review suggested a number of ideas from which to develop a possible measure of down-payment affordability, using the existing Canada Mortgage & Housing affordability measure as a starting point. Possible indicators of affordability are outlined and potential sources of data on household assets and savings capacity are evaluated. Ancillary questions about data elements used in the design of such a measure are discussed. The final section tests a conceptual model for assessing whether down payment is a serious constraint for first-time home buyers.

The March 1993 beating to death of a young Somali in Canadian Airborne Regiment custody led to establishment of an independent inquiry into the conduct of the Canadian Forces peacekeeping mission to Somalia, December 1992 to June 1993. This report details the background and conduct of the inquiry and presents its findings. Matters examined included the chain of command system in the Canadian Forces, leadership, discipline, operations, and actions and decisions of the Canadian Forces and the Dept. of National Defence in respect of the Somalia operation; and specific matters relating to pre-deployment, in-theatre, and post-theatre phases of the operation, such as the suitability and operational readiness of the Canadian Airborne Regiment for the peacekeeping operation, the composition and organization of the Somalia task force, the effect of cultural differences on the conduct of operations, attitudes of all ranks toward conduct of operations, and the manner in which the task force conducted its mission and tasks in theatre and responses to the operational, disciplinary, and administrative problems encountered, including allegations of cover-up and destruction of evidence. Volume 1 reviews the background to the inquiry and the report, concluding with description of the events and actions in Somalia that defined the issues warranting investigation. Volume 2 focuses on military operations and conduct, including leadership, training, discipline, rules of engagement, and operational readiness. Volume 3 is devoted to a case study of the mission planning process for the Somalia deployment. Volume 4 presents findings with respect to individual misconduct on the part of Canadian Forces officers. Volume 5 contains additional findings on important topics such as military justice, the role of the military in Canadian society and its civilian control, and the disclosure of documents, and includes a thorough analysis of the March 1993 incident. This final volume also includes a summary of the recommendations found throughout the report as well as appendices of background information.

In 1988 over 14 million white spruce and 68 million black spruce seedlings were produced in the province of Ontario. Following the first year of growth, distinction between the two species is relatively easy. Differences in the foliage, bud scales and shoots may all be used as keys in identification. However, in the first year of seedling growth, and particularly in the first few weeks following germination, differences between the species are limited. As a result, difficulties in identification and separation can cause particular problems for those involved in regeneration surveys, or for nursery workers when both species are grown in close proximity. This document looks at the distinction between white spruce and black spruce during the early stages of seedling growth.

En 1988, on a produit plus de 14 millions de semis d'épinette blanche et 68 millions de semis d'épinette noire en Ontario. Après la première année de croissance des semis, il est relativement facile de distinguer les deux espèces par leur feuillage, leurs écaillures et leurs pousses. Cependant, pendant la première année de croissance, particulièrement pendant les premières semaines, les différences entre les deux espèces sont peu nombreuses. Il est donc difficile de les identifier et de les séparer au cours de cette période, ce qui pose des problèmes aux sylviculteurs qui font des études de régénération et aux employés des pépinières où les deux espèces poussent à proximité l'une de l'autre. Ce document se penche sur les distinctions entre l'épinette blanche et l'épinette noire pendant les premiers stades de la croissance des semis.

Do financial incentives encourage welfare recipients to work? Initial 18-month findings from the Self-Sufficiency Project

The Self-Sufficiency Project (SSP) is a research and demonstration project that seeks a solution to the increasing poverty and welfare dependence of single parent families, who often face the choice of continuing on welfare or working for wages that may pay less than welfare. SSP provides a third option: It offers to supplement earnings of single-parent income assistance recipients who have received benefits for at least one year, provided they leave the welfare rolls and take a full-time job. This report analyzes the SSP's impacts on employment, earnings, and welfare receipt by comparing a group of SSP-eligible persons to a non-SSP control group over the first 18 months of SSP eligibility. Results are presented on a monthly and quarterly basis. Variations in impact by program generosity and family size are also noted.

Presents results of an exploration of the duration of joblessness following displacement using the 1988-90 Labour Market Activity Survey, a longitudinal data source that permits identification of workers who reported losing jobs due to a permanent layoff or plant closure. The study seeks to identify personal and job-specific characteristics associated with longer spells of post-displacement joblessness and to explore the issue of employability scarring, defined as a decreasing chance of starting a job the longer a worker is jobless. A survival time approach was adopted and the parameters of a hazard rate model were estimated, where the hazard rate is loosely defined as the probability that a worker will start a new job after an elapsed period of time. The parameter values show the estimated impact of certain characteristics on the expected period of joblessness following displacement. Whether this can be taken as evidence of scarring is discussed. Estimation results presented are compared with those from previous findings. Implications of the results for labour adjustment policy are also addressed.

This paper investigates alternative models of factor input demand in the Canadian and United States construction industries, with a focus on the demand for non-veneered structural panels (NSP) including waferboard and oriented strandboard. Two modelling approaches are described in the analysis, the first based on the neo-classical theory of the firm and the second approach emphasizing product innovation in the industry. Two families of models were used in the analysis, the logistic and dynamic models. The main object of the investigation was to test alternative model specifications to see if dynamic adjustments or an innovation diffusion process has been prevalent in the industry. The testing procedure involves a series of nested tests between the logistic and dynamic groups of models. Following this, a non-nested test is used to test the best models of each group against each other. A decomposition analysis is used to investigate factors underlying the demand substitution of NSP for plywood.

In the case of engineers, the effects of widespread losses in the skill base of graduates through the non- or under-utilization of engineering skills could be particularly detrimental to the accumulation of technology and, ultimately, to economic growth. This study uses three waves of the National Graduates Surveys, representing those who completed undergraduate engineering programs in 1982, 1986, and 1990, to address that issue along a number of potentially important dimensions: non-participation in the labour force, unemployment, part-time employment, holding a temporary job, non-use of skills learned at school, and employment in management positions. The goal is to provide an initial set of empirical results with direct inference for the accumulation of engineering skills, and to thereby establish a useful starting point for future investigations related to the accumulation of technology.

Presents a plan that establishes a framework for the development of the East Springbank I planning area, located on the western boundary of Calgary. Part I, the plan itself, starts with a vision for the East Springbank I community when fully built out and functioning. It then sets out key public interest goals and objectives for the plan that are in accordance with that vision, and explains the design concept and organizing principles for spatially arranging such major elements as neighbourhood nodes and areas, standard- and low-density infill, open spaces and joint use sites, transportation infrastructure, utility services, and environmental issues. Required and desirable uses and features are noted for each element. The final sections of part I provide information on plan implementation and feedback. Part II contains supporting information on the planning area and its natural features, policies affecting the plan, existing roads, planned utilities, and existing community services. Includes glossary.

The discovery of important accumulations of oil and natural gas in the eastcoast offshore region promises major economic and strategic benefits to Canada. Two important finds in particular, the Venture natural gas field and the Hibernia oil field, have spurred unprecedented oil and gas activity in Atlantic Canada in recent years in spite of a long-standing jurisdictional dispute between the federal government and Newfoundland. This document looks at eastcoast offshore oil and gas development.

The Economic and environmental impacts of reduced timber harvests and increased softwood lumber prices

By Robert G. Prins. Ottawa : Forestry Canada, Policy & Economics Directorate, Economic Studies Division, 1993. iv, 30 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Canadian Forest Service. Economic Studies Division ; 29)

Given a recent increase in the price of softwood lumber, the objectives of this paper are to: document and discuss this increase; discuss and estimate the degree of substitution between softwood lumber and non-wood materials in the Canadian construction sector; discuss the environmental implications of such substitution; and assess possible provincial responses to higher softwood lumber prices. The paper analyzes the demand for four intermediate goods: softwood lumber, structural clay bricks, concrete, and structural steel. Quarterly demand for these goods is estimated as a function of own price, cross prices, total Canadian housing starts, the value of non-residential construction, an index of industrial production, the wages of construction workers, and three dummy variables. Own- and cross-price elasticities estimated for building materials are presented and environmental implications of product substitution are briefly discussed in terms of a resulting increase in energy consumption.

This paper lists some of the economic and social costs of unemployment, in order to let our readers know how many aspects of our economic and social life are directly affected by unemployment and eventually are reflected in significant costs to our society. This paper includes an assessment of the economic costs of cyclical unemployment in terms of lost output that cost Canada somewhere between $16 and $55 billion in 1994. The loss of output due to cyclical unemployment also translates into net budgetary costs to government of 48 to $12 billion, while the loss of output due to structural unemployment could be in the vicinity of $13 to $22 billion in 1994.

The Economic impact of state legislation on mandatory recycled fibre content : an application of the North American Pulp & Paper Model

This paper analyzes the regional impact of mandatory newsprint recycled content on pulp and paper producers in North America. It uses the North American Pulp & Paper Model to compare the adoption rates of de-linking technology under the recycled content legislation with a hypothetical situation of no legislation, where the industry responds to market forces only. Alternatives to mandatory newsprint recycling are also discussed: reduction of newsprint weight, reuse of old newspapers for fuel or animal bedding, and exports. Regional impacts noted include the displacement of newsprint production and the backhauling of trucks and rail cars used to transport newsprint.

Starting in 1989, various US states began to impose recycled-content requirements on newsprint used in newspapers in order to address a perceived landfill crisis. Since Canada exports a large proportion of its newsprint production to the United States, this has meant a significant shift in its major market for newsprint. In this report, the North American Pulp and Paper Model is used to analyze the regional impacts of mandatory newsprint recycled-content regulations on North American pulp and paper producers. The model is used to project industry and market developments given the actual capacity expansion decisions (new de-linking facilities) that have been taken. The long-term impact of the industry response is projected, and the model is also employed to compare the actual adoption rates of de-linking technology with those under a hypothetical situation where there is no legislation and the industry responds to market forces only.

Results are given for 28 model runs for four different scenarios in which the key variables were the discount rate, the real rate of increase in roundwood prices, and average cost of regeneration of areas harvested. The results show how the industrial timber supply responds to changes in price and other economic parameters. The appendix reviews the steps involved in creating the database.

On déduit de ces changements dans les prix les effets sur la production, sur les exportations et sur la consommation intérieure des produits forestiers. On tente compte également des avantages perdus parce que les provinces n'ont pas voulu procéder à une réforme de leurs taxes de vente. Ce rapport contient un bref aperçu historique qui indique que cette recherche d'une vision positive axée sur la santé se reflète dans l'évolution des réponses données au Canada à la violence envers les femmes : dans les années 1970 et au début de la décennie suivante, on mettait fortement l'accent sur les traitements et les interventions ; à la fin des années 1980 et au début de la présente décennie, c'est à la prévention qu'on attachait le plus d'importance ; depuis quelques années, on met l'accent sur la promotion de la santé. Mais cette évolution a-t-elle produit des connaissances et des outils suffisants pour que le Canada puisse répondre avec efficacité aux besoins des femmes maltraitées, malgré la diminution de la contribution gouvernementale ? Comment une perspective axée sur la promotion de la santé peut-elle aider à orienter les futures actions ?

Explores the 1994 Adult Education & Training Survey to provide new insight into the employer-sponsored training system, using multivariate empirical analysis. Two specific issues are addressed: whether employer-sponsored training serves, in practice, to accentuate trends to rising inequality and polarization of the labour force, in the sense that the more advantaged workers tend to benefit more from such training; and whether there is an inverse relationship between training incidence and training duration, in the sense that segments of workers more likely to receive training are also those trained for a shorter duration. The paper focuses on the labour force aged 17 to 64 and examines both the determinants of receiving training and the determinants of the duration of training.

This compilation of papers explores the question of how Canada's average level of prosperity might be raised and how these gains might be widely distributed in the future. The first paper surveys trends in income distribution and the controversies involved in defining poverty lines, and discusses explanations for the rising disparities in market incomes. Particular attention is paid to questions of market failure that are central to each diagnosis of the rising inequality phenomenon. The second paper summarizes studies that estimate how many of the benefits of each government program go to individuals and families at each point on the income scale, and combines the calculations to estimate how much overall income redistribution Canadian governments do. The final paper investigates a version of new growth theory and presents a model whose key aspect is government spending on education as a means of raising both income equality and overall economic growth.

Il s'agit dans ce document de l'un d'une série de rapports fondés sur une étude du marché intérieur du tourisme. L'objectif global de l'étude est de déterminer comment mieux convaincre les Canadiens de choisir le Canada comme destination et d'examiner les possibilités de substitution des importations. Le rapport montre qu'il existe des possibilités réelles pour les responsables du tourisme dans la région Manitoba/Saskatchewan d'augmenter le nombre de voyages de plus d'un jour par des Canadiens dans cette région. Les points qui y sont abordés sont les suivants : taille du marché de la région Manitoba/Saskatchewan; comparaison des caractéristiques des voyages; positionnement concurrentiel de la région Manitoba/Saskatchewan; et, produits à exploiter pour la région Manitoba/Saskatchewan.

The European Community's proposed forestry policy : implications for Canadian exports?

By Don G. Roberts. Ottawa : Forestry Canada, Economics & Statistics Directorate, Forest Sector, Analysis Division, 1990. 31 p. : Bbl. (Working paper / Canadian Forest Service, Economic Studies Division ; 10)

The core of the forestry policy proposed in the summer of 1989 by the European Community is a set of financial incentives designed to induce land owners to convert their land from agriculture to forestry. This paper examines the nature of this policy and its implications for Canada's forest product exports. It reviews the economic context in which the policy is being introduced. It then considers the following issues related to possible impacts: whether the financial incentives will motivate land owners to convert, and if so, how much land would be converted; whether the trees on converted land will be cut; and the extent to which any cut wood will displace Canadian exports to Europe.

Cette étude vise à faire progresser la connaissance des questions relatives à l'approvisionnement en gaz naturel grâce à l'examen de l'activité en amont de l'industrie gazière et aux résultats de cette activité, pour la période allant de 1992 à 1996. Durant cette période, un nombre record de puits de gaz ont été forés, un grand nombre de gisements ont été raccordés aux fins de production et le caractère des travaux d'exploration et de développement a beaucoup changé. La réponse dynamique de l'industrie gazière en amont face aux signaux de prix et du marché montre son aptitude à fournir des approvisionnements adéquats en gaz lorsque la demande augmente rapidement. Cette étude porte surtout sur une recrudescence d'activité qui a été déclenchée par des conditions de marché particulières, mais il est possible de tirer des généralisations concernant les caractéristiques techniques de l'approvisionnement en gaz. L'étude permet de mieux comprendre la réponse de l'industrie face aux conditions du marché et à l'égard des ressources canadiennes de gaz naturel en général. Elle offre aussi des idées sur ce que pourrait être la réponse de l'industrie face aux changements dans l'avenir.

Le projet visait à développer un modèle de gestion intégrée des ressources pour les lots intramunicipaux. Cet outil devait permettre d'évaluer le potentiel global d'un territoire de 15 000 ha, de considérer l'ensemble des ressources (forêt, villégiature, flore, faune, paysage, etc.) et de planifier la séquence des interventions sylvicoles à réaliser. Pour ce faire, le promoteur a fait appel à différents consultants, notamment à la firme Gesfor qui a développé une interface permettant d'utiliser directement les données d'inventaire du ministère des Ressources naturelles pour le fonctionnement de son logiciel Sygvofo. Le système d'information géographique MapInfo a été retenu pour l'analyse du territoire et la création de cartes thématiques. De plus, la cartographie des stations forestières de l'UQAM et de l'URDFAT a été utilisée pour l'analyse écologique du territoire.

Evaluation of evapotranspiration-based septic systems, evapobeds, for treatment of domestic sewage in Essex County, Ontario

By Neil Hutchinson. Toronto : Ministry of Environment & Energy, 1997. v. 50 p. : ill., Bibl. ISBN 0-7778-6417-7 MICROLOG 97-05804 (1 fiche)

Evapotranspiration-based septic systems are designed to discharge all effluent to the atmosphere, and traditional designs consist of a sand bed over an impermeable liner. The sand bed may be planted with various types of vegetation or left bare. Many such systems have been adapted and installed in Essex County, Ontario, where conventional septic systems are not approved due to the relatively impermeable clay soils found in the area. This report describes a study conducted to review the operation and environmental acceptability of evapotranspiration-based septic systems (evapobeds) for the treatment and disposal of domestic sewage in clay soils or other low-infiltration environments in Ontario. Hydraulic performance of representative installations in Essex County was monitored by direct observation and by environmental tracers to detect surface breakouts or contamination of local water during the spring, when hydraulic stress to the systems was expected to be greatest. In addition, a hydrologic mass balance of a typical evapobed system was used to determine the theoretical validity of such systems under south-western Ontario climatic conditions.

Evolving patterns in the production and trade of Canadian forest products

This paper briefly examines Canada's production of forest products between 1961 and 1989, and analyzes Canada's evolving forest product trade patterns since 1970. A constant market share methodology is used to analyze export patterns of Canadian forest products. Within each of four product categories (lumber, wood panels, wood pulp, and paper products) Canadian production is noted in three ways: percent share relative to global production; percent share within each type of forest product; and annual compound growth rates. Changes in exports are attributed to four factors: market share, commodity mix, market mix, and an adaptation effect.

The Japanese distribution system for forest products is undergoing dramatic changes to accommodate the import of competitive products from a widening group of world suppliers. These changes provide new opportunities for exporters, particularly those producing more finished products. This report discusses the historical context of the Japanese distribution system for forest products and investigates the factors and trends that are leading to changes in wood products distribution. It also explores distribution in the major solid wood sectors and provides recommendations for potential public sector initiatives that could assist Canadian manufacturers in adapting to, and taking advantage of, those changes mentioned above. Topics covered in the report include housing trends, industry structure and regulatory environment, the financial and cultural environment and its impact on distribution, lumber distribution, and imported finished wood products distribution (including engineered wood products and prefabricated houses).

By Tom Dooley and Brian Johnson. St. John's : Dept. of Fisheries, Harvesting Operations Division, 1993. 19 p. MICROLOG 97-05658 (1 fiche)

Describes a project conducted to determine whether there is sufficient resource of northern stone crab (Lithodes maja) off the southern Newfoundland coast to warrant further efforts to develop a fishery for this type of crab. A crab harvesting component of the project was carried out in October-November 1992 using three fleets of 16 pots each, spaced 20-25 fathoms apart. Results are presented for the total of 368 pot loads hauled in. A second component involved processing of about 1,000 pounds of the crab and testing for crab yield and meat quality. Some problems with processing are identified.

Describes and presents results of a project to determine whether areas off the south coast of Newfoundland could support commercial scale fishing of northern stone crab (Lithodes maja). The first phase of the project involved 25 days of fishing in the Ramea area using 150 crab pots, with a minimum of 75 pot hauls per day. The second phase involved 20 fishing days in the Hermitage/Harbour Breton area using 50 crab pots, all of which were required to be hauled each day. Results are presented for total catch, catch per haul, and relation between haul and soak time. In addition, during the first phase a sample of crab was sent to a crab processor to evaluate problems with processing the crab using existing snow crab processing technology. Results of processing tests are also summarized.

The study decomposes data on family incomes in Canada for 1984-1993, by family type, age of family head and by decile and quintile within family type and age groups. For this reason, while confirming many of their conclusions, it is also able to make observations concerning the impacts of demographic change and to provide a more comprehensive analysis of the effects of the real average family income cycle and the tax/transfer system by family type and by age of head.

This paper takes a first step toward a transaction approach to research on the social and economic dynamics of Canadian families by first conceptually integrating into a framework a range of literature on how families use physical supports, financial resources, time, socio-emotional capacities, biological functions, and commodities; and second, by identifying the variables which must be considered in designing future studies. The family transactions framework used in the paper views families as a network of individuals who are connected through transactions, or private non-market interactions through which resources are transferred to meet needs. The paper argues that there is a need to define a new conceptual framework as a result of such factors as changes in the socio-political framework in which families operate, changes in the structure and activities undertaken by families, and theoretical shifts in sociology and economics. Family transactions are viewed as having two aspects: domain, a categorization of transactions by type, and dimension, or the circumstances in which transactions take place. The paper classifies transactions across five broad domains and three dimensions.

Less than 5 % of the seedlings in Compartment C20 had flattened roots, some of which appeared to have fused. This was the first observation of this phenomenon at Midhurst. This unusual morphology may be an example of fasciation, which typically occurs in plant stems and produces an enlargement and flattening of these parts, giving the appearance of multiple stems having coalesced.

The first part of this publication is the Ontario government policy statement on planning for floodplain lands in the province. It begins with background on the need to manage and control development in lands subject to flooding and then presents sections on definitions of terms, objectives and principles of the policy, the policies themselves (covering such points as regulatory flood standards, official plans, zoning of floodplain lands, and public safety), and policy implementation. The second part provides guidelines on implementing the policy, beginning with background on floodplain management and explanation of the provincial policy statement. Sections of the guidelines cover local conditions, including floodplain characteristics and flood control works; use of the Planning Act, zoning laws, and building codes; roles and responsibilities of conservation authorities; and evaluating floodplain planning strategies.

Fonction de coût variable des industries forestières canadiennes, le cas des pâtes et papiers du Québec

Ce mémoire tente de modéliser le comportement de l'industrie des pâtes et papiers du Québec à l'aide d'une fonction de coût variable. Les résultats de court terme, c'est-à-dire les élasticités-prix et de substitution de court terme, ainsi que les biais technologiques et l'homothéticité, par rapport aux facteurs variables, nous donnent des estimations comparables à celles obtenues par d'autres études. Par contre, les résultats de long terme, c'est-à-dire le niveau de capital optimal, la valeur fictive du capital et les élasticités de substitution de long terme, nous donnent des estimations déraisonnables. On conclut ce mémoire par la suggestion de deux avenues pour régler ce problème. La première serait d'employer l'utilisation du capital au lieu du stock de capital comme argument du modèle et la deuxième d'employer un modèle dynamique.

This document presents the Canadian International Development Agency perspectives on fish and food security. Topics covered are: Canada, the fisheries and world food security; the price of food insecurity;

CIDA's fisheries programs support Canada's wider foreign assistance goals; food security; and some highlights.

The classification system consists of 33 vegetation types and 22 soil types, which are identified using keys. Each vegetation and soil type together with pertinent management interpretations is described on fact sheets. Management interpretations are made for silviculture (season of harvest, harvest type, species selection, site preparation method, vegetation competition type and level) and wildlife habitat (caribou forage potential, moose summer feeding potential, moose thermoregulation potential and moose winter feeding potential). To assist in plant identification, 60 common or indicator understory plants are illustrated and described.

Le deuxième chapitre présente et interprète les résultats des analyses de régression; nous évaluons, dans un contexte à plusieurs variables, l'importance séparée des divers facteurs qui Introduces a simulation model for analyses of trade and forest policies that affect the Canadian forest industry. FORGEM (Forest General Equilibrium Model) is a short run, inter-sectoral, inter-regional model specified in a proportional rate of change format which divides the Canadian forest industry into five regions and five sectors. Final demands for forest products are modelled using Armington equations which assume that products distinguished only by place of origin are imperfect substitutes. Primary and intermediate inputs are modelled as imperfect substitutes, and multiple-output industries are modelled using constant elasticity of transformation functions with individual output supply functions based on input and output prices. Use of the model is illustrated by simulating the impact on the British Columbia forest sector of eliminating Japanese import tariffs on forest products.

Dans le contexte budgétaire actuel, le gouvernement doit trouver des moyens plus abordables, plus rentables et plus efficaces d'offrir ses programmes et ses services. La stratégie d'adoption d'un nouveau mode de prestation des services est l'un des meilleurs moyens d'y parvenir. Elle consiste à trouver de nouvelles méthodes de prestation permettant d'améliorer les services sans accroître les dépenses, ou de maintenir les services en réduisant les dépenses. La décision d'adopter un nouveau mode de prestation des services doit reposer sur une analyse de rentabilisation sérieuse. Il s'agit d'une méthode visant à comparer systématiquement les coûts et avantages des modes de prestation actuels à ceux que l'on envisage. Elle a pour but d'aider à la prise de décisions en permettant de choisir le mode de prestation le plus économique. L'analyse de rentabilisation s'appuie sur l'analyse coûts-avantage, elle-même fondée sur la méthode de la valeur actualisée nette.

Guide to preparing a business case for alternative service delivery

Toronto : Management Board Secretariat, 1996. 26 p. French ed. (Guide de préparation d'une analyse...) on the same fiche. ISBN 0-7778-6100-3

Today's environment and fiscal situation calls for government to deliver more affordable, efficient and effective programs and services. One important approach for achieving this objective is the alternative delivery strategy. This strategy looks for alternatives to the current method of delivery to either improve services without increasing expenditures or maintain services at lower expenditure levels. One of the guiding principles for choosing an alternative service delivery method is to base the decision on a sound business case. A business case is a systematic approach to comparing the costs and benefits of current and alternative methods of delivery. Its purpose is to help decision makers to choose the most cost-effective delivery method. Cost/benefit analysis based on net present value is central to developing a business case.

The controversy to which hate propaganda gives rise appears to be more virulent and far-reaching than the volume and availability alone of this material would seem to justify. Although material inciting hatred and advocating racial superiority, has probably always existed, the last 30 years have witnessed a widespread debate as to what, if anything, to do about it. This debate places in the most acute conflict possible generally accepted Canadian multicultural and egalitarian social values and the libertarian value of freedom of expression.

By Émile Allie. Hull, PQ : Human Resources Development Canada, Strategic Policy, Applied Research Branch, 1994. v, 19 p. : Bibl. (Research paper series / Canada. Human Resources Development Canada ; R-96-6E)

Constructs a small general equilibrium model to analyze the impacts on employment and other economic variables of changes in unemployment insurance (UI) contribution rates and maximum insurable earnings. The model describes the labour market with three types of workers, the production sector, and the UI program. When UI contribution rates are modified, the changes in wages, price, employment, and production form the basis of an exact analytical solution. The following scenarios are examined: reduction of one percentage point of the effective employer and employee UI contribution rates for low, medium, and high earning/skilled workers; eliminating the employer contribution ceiling; eliminating the employer and employee contribution ceilings; and eliminating the employer and employee contribution and benefit ceilings, with additional UI revenue or surplus in the last three scenarios used to lower the statutory UI contribution rate.

Mastery learning is an instructional strategy based on the principle that all students can learn a set of reasonable objectives with appropriate instruction and sufficient time to learn. It includes a philosophy, curriculum structure, instructional model, alignment of student assessment, and a teaching approach. Outcome-based education (OBE) is a structure at a school and district level that stresses clearly defined outcomes, criterion-referenced measures of success, instructional strategies directly related to student abilities and needs, flexible use of time and learning opportunities, recognition of student success, and modification of programs on the basis of student needs. This paper describes these two educational concepts and reviews research on, and experience with, the concepts. Mastery learning implementation experiences are reviewed for whole-class mastery models and models with flexible grouping, continuous progress, computer-assisted instruction, and instructional management. Problems with the concept and lessons learned are also noted. Finally, discussion is presented on recent thinking about school restructuring, improving curriculum and instruction, and accomplishing school reform.

NASA views the construction and operation of a permanently manned space station as the critical next step in advancing human space exploration. The mission of the space station will be three-fold. It will provide an orbiting research base to assess the effects of long stays in space on human physiology and well-being, it will function as an advanced research laboratory to study near-zero gravity, near-perfect vacuum and lack of atmospheric interference, and it will be an engineering test-bed providing the opportunity to learn how to build, operate and maintain complex systems in space. This paper provides a background and analysis which looks at the space station, Canada's Space Station Program, the mobile servicing system, the Strategic Technologies in Automation and Robotics (STEAR) Program, and other international contributions (Japanese Experimental Module, European Space Agency's Pressurized Module).

L'inventaire des forêts du Canada est une base de données à référence spatiale qui permet de superposer les limites des régions de façon à ce que celles-ci soient intégrées à l'inventaire à des fins de visualisation et d'établissement de rapports. Depuis l'inventaire de 1986, on a intégré à l'IFCan les régions et les sections forestières. Ce rapport présente notamment des cartes des écozones et des écorégions, ainsi que le nom, les codes numériques et la superficie totale de celles-ci et leur répartition entre les provinces. L'IFCan est un inventaire des forêts de sorte que ses données détaillées ne portent que sur les grandes régions boisées (65 %) du pays. Il présente sous forme de tableaux des données illustrant la structure des classes de terre, la composition des forêts et l'accroissement forestier. Ces données peuvent être calculées à l'échelle des écozones et des écorégions, mais ce rapport n'en fait état qu'au niveau de l'écozone.

Willemar Bluffs is a natural landform about 40 metres high and extending several hundred metres along the ocean about two kilometres east of Comox, British Columbia. In 1982, the Regional District of Comox-Strathcona received approval to construct a sanitary sewer pipeline along the foreshore of the bluffs, with the condition that the foreshore was to be returned to its natural condition afterwards. Following complaints by local residents that erosion of the bluffs after construction greatly exceeded historic erosion rates, the provincial Ombudsman initiated an investigation whose findings are reported in this document. Issues considered include the Regional District's compliance with the condition that the foreshore be restored, and the acceptance of responsibility for the restoration. The Regional District's response to the Ombudsman's recommendations regarding this matter are included.

The Canadian Self-Sufficiency Project (SSP) is mainly targeted at single parent households on social assistance. The objective of the project is to test a program that provides strong financial incentives for the heads of these households to enter full-time employment and end their reliance on social assistance. This paper focuses on the design of the program to be tested by the SSP. It reviews the policy choices to be made in designing the program, such as level of benefits to be paid, benefits/earnings relationships, work requirements, and eligibility. Issues to be confronted in administering the program, whatever its design, are then discussed. This is followed by a review of four possible program designs, with emphasis on how the benefit levels and work incentives provided by each program would vary by type of family. Finally, the paper discusses simulations of the candidate SSP programs and why such simulations are needed.

Since the early 1980s, a career counselling document entitled Job Futures has been published through the Canadian Occupational Projection System (COPS). Utilizing new data sets and an improved output from COPS, the core content of the 1996 edition of Job Futures has been totally re-engineered and differs markedly from previous editions. The purpose of this paper is to serve as a dictionary of data sources and an interpretive guide for Job Futures analysts. The paper also explains why some data were not used and why others were selected for analysis. Section 2 describes the various data sources used for both volumes of the 1996 edition. Section 3 details the raw data and how they were transformed to yield meaningful statistics for interpreting current and future labour market conditions across occupations. Section 4 discusses the derivation and interpretation of various occupational demand indicators that were, or could be, used to determine the outlook for various occupational groups. Sections 5 and 6, analogous to sections 3 and 4, focus on programs of study as opposed to occupations. The final section includes discussion of possible areas for further improvement.

Concerns over the weak recovery in employment following the 1990-1991 recession led many observers to describe this period as a "jobless recovery". This research paper uses econometric estimations and simulations of employment equations to determine if the weakness in employment growth over the 1991-95 period can be explained by weak output growth, the evolution of real wages, industrial restructuring or the evolution in the real cost of capital. Our results suggest that the growth of real wages has contributed to the weakness in employment growth during the recovery but was not the dominant factor. Rather, the results indicate that the historical relationship between output and employment does not appear to have changed. The weak recovery in employment was mostly due to the weak recovery in output rather than a fundamental change in the ability of the economy to generate jobs.

Various government and institutional costs associated with purchasing a new home can cumulatively amount to a significant portion of the home's cost. Such costs have a direct effect on the overall cost of housing and ultimately on housing affordability. This study examines the levies, fees, charges, taxes, and transaction costs which would accrue on modest new housing in 26 municipalities across Canada. In comparing these costs, the 20th percentile price of newly completed houses defines the price of the typical house in a particular municipality. The types of costs evaluated include local charges (infrastructure charges, land dedications, development application processing fees, and building permit related fees); provincial and federal sales taxes; and transaction costs such as legal fees, certificates, land transfer taxes, registration charges, and fees associated with arranging mortgages.

This report documents an assessment of the gas resources of the Mannville Group formations and stratigraphic equivalents in the Western Canada Sedimentary Basin. The resources are described in terms of detailed geological play analysis and numerical assessment of undiscovered gas potential using a technique termed the discovery process model, which employs the volume and discovery sequence of individual pools or plays, within a natural population of pools or plays, to predict undiscovered potential. The analysis of the Mannville gas potential involved delineation and systematic evaluation of 17 established plays (16 mature and one immature). The geology of the plays is outlined in a manner that can be used as a guide for exploration, and each play is designated by geographic area and by geological unit.

La saisonnalité dans le tourisme est l'une des plus grandes difficultés qui se pose pour les destinations et les attractions partout dans le monde. Du fait que la demande touristique est concentrée à certaines époques de l'année, il y a congestion pendant les périodes de pointe et une capacité excédentaire aux autres moments de l'année. Dans ce rapport spécial, fondé sur les résultats de l'étude de recherche sur le marché intérieur du tourisme, on examine les variations saisonnières du tourisme au Canada et on établit un profil des segments du marché intérieur qui auraient une propension à voyager en basse saison et en saison intermédiaire.

En 1994, le Canada a enregistré un déficit de 5,7 milliards de dollars pour la balance touristique internationale. L'un des principaux objectifs de cette étude est de trouver des façons de réduire ce déficit en augmentant le tourisme intérieur.

There is a growing interest in measurement of well-being or development of social indicators which go beyond measurements such as changes in interest rates, inflation, or the gross domestic product. Such measurement is felt to be crucial to furthering awareness about the impact of political and economic activities and should also be an important guide to decision-makers in the public and private sectors. This report contains proceedings of a symposium held to bring together researchers, analysts, and practitioners to move forward the process of developing measures of well-being or social indicators in Canada. The sections are arranged in order of presentation at the symposium and include papers on international experience with social indicators, benchmarks and measures, community audits and impact assessments, and national accounting.

A Method for estimating the dollar values of lost wildlife diversity and abundance resulting from wildlife-road vehicle collisions

Vehicle-wildlife collisions are one of the most direct and visible negative environmental consequences of highways that bisect mobile wildlife populations. Such collisions can have significant effects on the abundance and diversity of affected wildlife populations. This paper presents a method that may be used to estimate the frequency of such collisions and calculate their corresponding dollar value. This value may then be used in the economic analysis of mitigation or alternative planning strategies. A theoretical example is presented to illustrate the information and calculations necessary to estimate the monetary costs of non-consumptive, consumptive, and preservation values resulting from road-related wildlife mortalities.

Analyzes the causes of the decline in the ratio of the number of regular unemployment insurance (UI) beneficiaries to the number of unemployed persons (the B/U ratio), and presents a new methodology for predicting the B/U ratio based on the concept of potential beneficiaries. Also presents a projection of the B/U ratio for the period from 1995 to the year 2000 based on this new methodology. The new methodology consists in estimating two equations for the behaviour of unemployed persons who are not eligible for UI. These behavioural equations are then used to project the two series over time, and based on these projections, the total number of unemployed is adjusted to obtain a projection of the potential beneficiaries. Finally, the resulting projection of potential beneficiaries is used to predict the number of regular UI beneficiaries and the B/U ratio.

This study uses the 1988-90 Statistics Canada Labour Market Activity Survey to test whether there is negative duration dependence in unemployment spells. It updates and extends similar work carried out by Jones (1995) who used the 1986-87 Survey, and focuses on the human-capital or de-skilling explanation for hysteresis. The paper applies a micro-based statistical procedure called hazard function analysis to longitudinal data from the 1988-90 Survey to assess whether the probability of exiting from unemployment does indeed decline as the length of the unemployment spell increases. After an introductory section, the paper describes the data base and the concepts of hazard and survival functions. Specific types of hazard models are outlined and hazard model estimation results are presented for unemployment and non-employment durations. These results are compared to those of Jones and the sensitivity of the results to changes in estimation periods, changes in distributional assumptions, and the addition of new variables is explored. Finally, estimates of hysteresis are provided.

Reports on an agricultural drainage placement experiment at the Inkerman Bog peat operation in New Brunswick. The problem being addressed is the need for better drainage practices in shallow peatlands underlain by sand or clay. Drainage by ditching in such lands brings the sand or clay to the surface, rendering peat quality unsaleable. The experiment involved using a modified tractor and ditcher unit that can install a flexible drainpipe at a suitable depth without bringing sand or clay to the surface. Results are presented from a field trial of the equipment, noting problems encountered and suggesting modifications to overcome those problems.

It discusses how monetized costs of environmental impacts can be included in evaluation approaches and provides a selective overview of shadow pricing. The approach used in the report breaks down the complexity of impacts into individual economic and non-economic functions of the natural systems that are affected by transportation activities. The result is two sets of values: shadow prices for environmental amenities which are not necessarily seen in the market, and non-monetizable and intangible values which may have uncertain outcomes. Preliminary shadow prices are presented and non-monetized values for further study are identified. Includes glossary. BC CO EV PR SC

First, levels of gas-directed activity within the producing sector are examined through analysis of data on market signal/producer response lag time, acquisition of exploration rights, trends in geophysical exploration, level of drilling activity, balance between exploration and development effort, and the pace of connecting wells for production. Second, the study provides an examination of underlying supply characteristics having a bearing on producers' efforts to maintain and expand gas supply through an analysis of the vintage and productivity of newly connected wells, trends in production rates, and trends in well decline rates. Third, producer success at finding new reserves and developing additional productive capacity is estimated. Methods are described for yielding more timely estimates of gas reserves additions and productive capacity based on latest available drilling statistics. The main objective of this paper is to examine the implications for the Canadian forest products sector of a trilateral Canada-United States-Mexico free trade agreement (FTA). The first section provides a brief overview of trade within North America and identifies forces and concerns which have led to the proposed trade negotiations. The section identifies the major issues which would likely have to be addressed if the existing Canada-US FTA were to be expanded to include Mexico. The third section provides a profile of the Mexican forest sector, including its resource base, production and consumption of forest products, exports and imports, trends, and barriers to trade and investment. The final section analyzes, from the Canadian forest sector perspective, the potential opportunities and threats which may emerge from a trilateral Canada-US-Mexico FTA.

The North American pulp and paper industry : the implications of environmental regulation for competitiveness

The most significant regulations affecting the pulp and paper industry tend to be motivated by a desire to protect the environment. This paper focuses on the implications of those regulations on the competitiveness of the pulp and paper industry. Section

1 sets out the context for competition in this industry in North America. An international comparison of environmental regulations affecting the industry is provided in section 2 and the industry's planned capital expenditures on production and environmental investments in the major producing regions of North America are documented in section 3. Section 4 contains a case study of the competitive implications of the specific pollution regulations specified in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, and section 5 examines some of the implications of the minimum recycled content regulations being adopted in the United States. The paper concludes with an assessment of the likelihood of less-developed countries turning into pollution havens for the pulp and paper industry.

This book describes the struggle to build on a 25-year approach to democratic social change and personal growth known as participatory action-research (PAR). This approach is based on the principle that people have a universal right to participate in the production of knowledge that directly affects their lives. The focus is on a series of case studies of PAR and the attempts to achieve it in such places as Canada, India, Africa, and Latin America. The studies involve such projects as helping farmers, women's health services, ethnographic research, community development, and community hospital services. The final chapter analyzes lessons from these case studies and explores the principles and evolving processes of the PAR methodology in striving to satisfy the need for liberation and recovery of community.

The Occupational dynamics of recent Canadian engineering graduates inside and outside the bounds of technology

Presents an investigation of the occupational patterns of recent engineering graduates, following three cohorts from the National Graduates Surveys over the first five years in the labour market. Begins with an introduction on the importance of engineers to economic performance and on the data sources used. This is followed by an examination of the distribution of engineers by occupational category, within the broad classification of engineering versus non-engineering fields. To appraise the attractiveness of engineering versus non-engineering jobs and the relative skill use patterns, the next section presents some labour market outcomes for those engineering graduates by different groups of occupations using a static perspective. This is compared to a dynamic analysis of the data based on those graduates who stay and those who move across sectors between two and five years after graduation.

Occupational separation flows in the current COPS models

The rate at which people leave an occupation is a key determinant of the employment opportunities for newcomers. Thus, deriving sound estimates of occupational separations is a critical component of occupational forecasting. The Canadian Occupational Projections System (COPS) underwent major methodological enhancement over 1994-95, with drastic change in the treatment of separations. The purpose of this paper is to review the results of this enhancement, focusing on three concepts of occupational separation that can be defined within the new COPS model. The methods used to define these concepts are compared with those used in the old COPS framework and with those of the US Bureau of Labor Statistics. The theoretical foundations of these methods are also discussed in detail. Once established, these concepts are then used to generate empirical estimations of the separation rates. Variations in these rates are explained with reference to the underlying theory.

Options for the provincialization and regionalization of the COPS national model

Examines methods by which the Canadian Occupational Projections System (COPS) modelling framework could be extended to a regionally or provincially based system of models. The revised COPS model seeks to produce estimates of demand and supply for non-employed labour supply (newcomers) by occupation. Extending this framework to a geographically disaggregated set of models requires modelling internal migration by occupation. The paper considers data sources and methods for such modelling and also considers data sources and possible methods for estimating replacement demand and the components of the supply of newcomers on a geographically disaggregated basis. Finally, two illustrative models are sketched, one extending the COPS system to top-down provincial models and the other extending it to bottom-up regional models.

Parlee Beach Provincial Park is located along the Northumberland Strait east of Shediac, New Brunswick. This report presents a study conducted to identify viable entrepreneurial development opportunities and future direction for park infrastructure that reflect the market, ecology, and social fabric of the park area. The study begins with an analysis of the physical characteristics found on the park site which would impact a master plan for the park, including the physical setting, state of park infrastructure, and environmental impacts. The study then describes the social, cultural, and legislative aspects to be considered in formation of a master plan, including visitor profiles, land use policies, and development challenges. Finally, it presents the guiding philosophy for a master plan, conceptual options to address challenges identified, and the master plan itself. Provisions of the plan address such matters as visitor services, park activities, access and circulation, parking, beach protection, recreation, camping, community integration, and park administration. An implementation schedule and budget is also proposed.

La Pauvreté des enfants au Canada : examen des tendances de la profondeur et de l'incidence du point de vue du revenu monétaire total, de 1975 à 1992

Ce document a deux objectifs. Le premier objectif est de décrire les tendances de l'incidence et de la profondeur de la pauvreté des enfants au Canada de 1975 à 1992. Le deuxième objectif est d'évaluer la mesure dans laquelle les tendances de l'incidence de la pauvreté sont liées à l'évolution de la structure familiale. Dans la section II, on fait un bref survol de documents récents traitant d'aspects de la pauvreté des enfants au Canada. Les questions relatives aux mesures et les préoccupations touchant les données sont abordés dans la section III. Dans la section IV, on expose les tendances de la pauvreté de l'ensemble des enfants et des jeunes enfants selon deux différents seuils de pauvreté. D'abord, on calcule le taux de pauvreté des enfants sur la base du seuil de faible revenu de 1986 de Statistique Canada, corrigé annuellement en fonction du changement de l'indice des prix à la consommation; deuxièmement, on calcule les taux de pauvreté des enfants sur la base d'un seuil correspondant à 75 % du SFR de 1986, corrigé annuellement en fonction du changement de l'indice des prix à la consommation. La section V porte sur la profondeur de la pauvreté des familles comprenant des enfants, selon les seuils de pauvreté examinés dans la section IV. Dans la section VI, on élabore un modèle comptable pour évaluer les grandeurs relatives dans le temps de l'effet du changement des proportions d'enfants faisant partie de familles biparentales et monoparentales et le risque intragroupe de pauvreté sur les taux globaux de pauvreté des enfants. La section VII renferme les observations finales.

Payroll taxes and employment in Canada : some evidence from provincial data

Examines whether there is statistical evidence for a systematic short-term relationship between changes in payroll taxes and employment in Canada, using data at the provincial level over 1968-93. Results are included concerning the statistical relationship examined for each of the four components of payroll taxes: unemployment insurance premiums, Canada/Quebec pension plan contributions, workers' compensation premiums, and education/health premiums. The results provide empirical evidence regarding the tax benefit features of programs funded through payroll taxes. Policy implications of the analysis are discussed, notably with respect to the relationship between the employment effects of payroll taxes and the nature of the changes made to specific programs.

Describes a report generator developed for the North American Pulp and Paper Model, to be used in conjunction with the Price Endogenous Linear Programming System, PELPS III. The model is a spatial equilibrium model of the North American pulp and paper sector formulated in a mathematical programming framework, while PELPS III is designed to solve these mathematical programming problems. The prototype PELPS III Report Generator is a stand-alone system written in QuickBASIC which overcomes limitations of the report generation capabilities of PELPS III. This report contains details on installing and using the report generator, input requirements, and generation of output reports including input supply tables, production tables, production cost tables, consumption tables, manufacturing capacity tables, and transportation cost tables.

Pénuries de main-d'oeuvre qualifiée au Canada : notions élémentaires

Le sens du terme "pénurie" au point de vue économique est mal compris, de sorte que les discussions portant sur la question ont souvent embrouillé l'analyse des problèmes qui s'y rattachent, de leurs causes et des solutions pouvant être apportées. Il faut commencer par une introduction, un examen dirigé de la documentation et un aperçu des indicateurs empiriques concernant le Canada. Ce document vise à combler cette lacune. On y présente d'abord la notion de pénurie de main-d'oeuvre qualifiée. On y examine ensuite le concept plus général de déséquilibre sur le marché du travail, on y étudie des méthodes d'évaluation, on y rend compte des indicateurs de tels déséquilibres au Canada et on y discute de certaines questions de politique gouvernementale.

La question est double : au Canada, peut-on maintenir la récolte du bois à son rythme actuel? Le Canada manquera-t-il de forêts? La première question est des plus préoccupantes pour l'industrie forestière. Celle-ci veut savoir si on peut maintenir la récolte du bois industriel ou si on peut l'accroître à long terme. Le public craint que l'industrie ne pratique une récolte excessive, que les forêts du Canada ne soient exploitées à outrance et qu'elles ne soient pas reboisées aussi rapidement qu'elles le devraient. En fait, ce dont le public s'inquiète surtout, c'est de la pérennité de la forêt elle-même, et non du caractère durable de la récolte à son rythme actuel. Ce qu'il veut, c'est que le Canada conserve de vastes forêts, y compris amplement de vieilles forêts et de zones sauvages, de beaux paysages et d'espaces pour la faune, les loisirs, etc. Ce document porte précisément sur la pérennité de la ressource ligneuse.

Ce document présente, dans le cadre d'un scénario de référence, les perspectives de l'offre et de la demande d'énergie au Canada au cours des vingt-cinq prochaines années, ainsi que les projections relatives aux émissions de gaz à effet de serre. Il est le fruit de vastes consultations menées auprès d'experts des secteurs public et privé ainsi que d'un examen attentif des liens existants entre la consommation et la production d'énergie et divers facteurs tels que les prix, l'économie, la démographie, la technologie et les politiques en vigueur. On doit toutefois souligner que les projections présentées dans ce document ne constituent qu'un des scénarios possibles pour le Canada. Il s'agit, en fait, d'un point de vue sur ce qui pourrait arriver si un ensemble d'hypothèses plausibles se concrétisaient dans l'avenir. De toute évidence, les résultats de l'analyse sont plus fiables à moyen terme qu'à long terme, étant donné la difficulté de prévoir avec précision l'évolution technologiques sur une longue période.

Summarizes results of soil and vegetation sampling conducted near seeps along the Redhill Creek Tributary gorge, Felker Falls Conservation Area, and in the general vicinity of the Taro landfill, near Stoney Creek, Ontario. Area residents were concerned that leachate from the landfill may be impacting soils and vegetation, and that changes in 1992 to the pattern of clean surface water discharge from the landfill area may have resulted in increased seep salinity. Sampling sites were established to address active seeps and control sites were located in areas separated from the seeps. Vegetation observations were made at each site and soil and vegetation samples were collected from each area. Results are included for analyses of inorganic elements and or-

The Pine Coulee project is a water management project that includes a diversion weir on Willow Creek, a 3.5-kilometre canal, and a multiple-use, off-stream storage reservoir in Pine Coulee, about 100 kilometres south of Calgary. The proposed diversion weir and canal would carry water from the creek to the reservoir. This report presents the assessment of the project by a joint federal/provincial panel regarding matters within the jurisdiction of the Alberta Natural Resources Conservation Board Act and the federal Environmental Assessment and Review Process Guidelines Order. Preliminary matters considered include public policy and jurisdiction. The report then considers the need or justification for the project, including the value of irrigation and municipal water supply, project alternatives, and economic viability. Subsequent sections review water management in the Willow Creek Basin and evaluate the environmental, economic, and social effects of the project, including effects on water quality and quantity, fisheries, soils and drainage, vegetation, wildlife, the local economy, land use, transportation, and Aboriginal archaeological sites and artefacts. The report concludes with a Natural Resources Conservation Board decision respecting the public interest and recommendations from the Federal Environmental Assessment & Review Panel.

Edmonton : Alberta Health, Health Surveillance, 1997. 59 p. : Ill.

In 1996, incidents including accidental emissions and spills were reported at the Alberta Special Waste Treatment Centre in Swan Hills. Based on initial evidence showing polychlorinated biphenyl (PCB) contamination of deer meat taken near the Centre, Alberta Health issued a food consumption advisory for wild game and fish taken within a 30-kilometre radius of the Centre site. This report presents initial findings regarding PCB and dioxin/furan levels from 60 fresh and frozen samples of deer and moose meat taken 1996-97 in the Swan Hills area. Contaminant levels in samples obtained within 20 kilometres of the Centre were compared with those taken further away.

La pornographie, c'est-à-dire toute représentation explicitement sexuelle, n'est pas un phénomène nouveau. Certaines personnes estiment que rien ne prouve de façon convaincante qu'il existe un lien de causalité entre la pornographie et la violence physique réelle, et que les autres effets possibles de la pornographie sont trop ténus ou négligeables pour que l'on attente à bon droit à la liberté d'expression garantie dans la Constitution. Ce bulletin tente de donner un aperçu de ce débat.

Sexually explicit material, or pornography, is not a new phenomenon. It has existed in some form in virtually every society throughout history. There are people who contend that there is no convincing evidence of any causal relationship between pornography and actual physical harm, and that any other effects are too attenuated or insignificant to justify the infringement of the constitutionally guaranteed freedom of expression. This publication attempts to give a survey of this debate.

The Potential effects of phase two of tax reform on Canada's forest sector

The primary intent of this paper is to examine the effects on the forest sector of the proposed federal sales tax reform and the potential effects if there is national sales tax reform. The first part of the paper assesses the direct impact of the sales tax reform on input and output prices in the forest sector. From these changes in prices, we deduce the effects on production, exports, and domestic consumption of forest products. Consideration is also given to the benefits foregone due to the lack of provincial sales tax reform. The paper is organized in two sections. Section I describes sales tax reform of tax reform and Section II evaluates the impact of sales tax reform on the forest sector.

Ce document a pour but d'évaluer le bien-fondé de chacun des arguments avancés afin d'établir si eux, les Américains, ont tort et si nous, les Canadiens, avons raison en ce qui a trait au chapitre 19. Autrement dit, il analyse si, comme c'était l'intention des négociateurs, les dispositions du chapitre 19 ont amélioré la façon dont les lois sur les droits antidumping et sur les droits compensateurs sont administrées au Canada et aux États-Unis. Le document comporte trois parties. La première partie analyse les arguments en faveur et les arguments contre le processus d'examen par des groupes spéciaux binationaux prévu au chapitre 19. La 2e partie passe en revue un certain nombre de différends pour évaluer la validité des arguments. Elle porte sur les différends canado-américains en général et sur quelques différends bilatéraux en particulier. La 3e partie présente les conclusions tirées de la partie II et suggère un certain nombre d'implications stratégiques mineures concernant le traitement qui sera réservé au chapitre 19 par la suite.

Estimates of possible damages caused by greenhouse gas emissions from transportation activities are required in order to account for the impacts in project and policy evaluations. These estimates consist of a monetized portion and a non-monetized portion, the former representing a possible future monetary cost termed the shadow price. This paper summarizes a literature review of monetary estimates and the uncertainty of conceivable economic damages due to transportation-related greenhouse gases and climate change, and documents a precautionary calculation of the shadow price of the damage. Results are given in Canadian dollars per tonne of carbon dioxide equivalent. The sensitivity of the result to small changes in certain factors is noted.

The Price Responsive Timber Supply Model (PRTSM) is designed to address a core set of questions including what is Canada's current timber supply, how it will be affected by market trends, and how it will be affected by investments in second growth management, recovery and utilization, transportation infrastructure, and protection. PRTSM models the response of the economic dimensions of the forest to trends in the prices of forest products, the cost of harvesting, and to the investments mentioned above. It also models the standing stock and dynamics of a forest in a manner comparable to a conventional timber supply model. This report describes some of the concepts on which PRTSM was established and presents an overview of the structure of the model, including its representation of the state of the forest land base and timber resource, as well as the process used to transform the state of the forest.

Meeting the need for skills created by a changing economy requires the need to identify current and future skill shortages. This publication attempts to fill a gap in understanding of the economic meaning of a skill shortage. It introduces the notion of skill shortages and reviews the more general concept of imbalance in the labour market. It then investigates the most common methodologies that have been used in industrialized countries to practically detect and measure skill shortages, and attempts to relate the empirical concepts and methods used to the definitions of skill shortage developed in the introduction. Section 4 reports on existing evidence of skill shortages in Canada, describing some key measurement methodologies used and relating the findings to an analytical framework. Section 5 discusses some public policy implications, and presents potential rationales for specific public policy interventions directed to occupational market imbalances and their information requirements. Finally, avenues for future research are suggested.

The economic contribution of these sectors are compared in terms of revenue and employment, taking into account direct and indirect effects. Three models are employed: an open model, in which final demand is composed of consumption, investments, governments, and exports; a model like the open model, but partially closed on consumption; and a closed model, with a final demand composed only of exports. The resource sectors considered include livestock, field crops, fisheries, forestry, metal mines, minerals, and fossil fuels.

L'objectif visé par cette étude est de répondre à certaines questions, du moins partiellement, en utilisant les groupes écoforestiers pour modéliser la production de matière ligneuse à partir des caractéristiques permanentes du milieu. Dans cette optique, les phases écologiques seront regroupées en groupes écoforestiers et ces groupes serviront de substitut aux valeurs d'indices de qualité de station pour estimer le rendement et la croissance des peuplements. À cette fin, une étude de la correspondance entre les indices de qualité de station et les phases écologiques a préalablement été effectuée pour vérifier l'hypothèse sous-jacente à cet objectif, à savoir que les phases écologiques peuvent exprimer la capacité productive de la station.

Au Canada, la reprise économique qui a suivi la récession des années 1990 à 1992 a été de courte durée et s'est avérée beaucoup moins robuste que celle observée au cours de la période 1983-1989. Les perspectives pour 1996 incitent également à un certain optimisme même s'il pourrait y avoir un certain risque de baisse étant donné les incertitudes économiques qui règnent actuellement. Ce document présente le Plan d'activités 1996-1997 du Programme de valorisation de l'industrie. Les points qui y sont abordés sont les suivants: contexte économique; défis et questions auxquels fait face l'industrie touristique; objectif du programme et orientations stratégiques pour 1996-1999; et, plan d'activités pour 1996-1997.

La propagande haineuse suscite une controverse d'une virulence et d'une ampleur qui ne semblent pas justifiées, si l'on ne tient compte que de son volume et de sa diffusion. La propagande incitant à la haine et préconisant l'inégalité raciale a probablement toujours existé; toutefois, les trente dernières années ont été le témoin d'un débat généralisé sur ce qu'il convient de faire à ce sujet, si tant est qu'on y puisse quelque chose. Cette discussion met plus directement que jamais en conflit les valeurs sociales généralement acceptées au Canada que sont le multiculturalisme et l'égalitarisme, d'une part, et la liberté d'expression, d'autre part.

Prostitution is at once a feminist and civil libertarian issue, and a law and order issue. It raises questions of morality and constitutional rights and freedoms. One of the few areas of consensual sexual activity that is still subject to legal control and the imposition of criminal sanctions, prostitution continues to engender vigorous debate. This document looks at the controversial subject of prostitution including development of the criminal law, & the Fraser Committee proposals.

Elle soulève des questions relatives à la moralité ainsi qu'aux droits et aux libertés garanties dans la Constitution. C'est une des rares activités sexuelles consensuelles qui est encore assujettie à la loi et à des sanctions pénales, et elle continue de susciter des débats passionnés. Ce document examine la question de la prostitution (droit pénal, Comité Fraser).

Many approaches to public advisory bodies have been applied in various land use planning contexts in British Columbia. This report reviews the experiences of the Ministry of Forests with these public advisory bodies and offers suggestions that may assist with the design and application of future public advisory/land use planning processes. It first discusses the Ministry's goals for its decision making and the role of public involvement in meeting those goals, such as fairness, efficiency, effectiveness, and planning outcomes. The report then describes the foundations for establishing and operating public advisory bodies and presents challenges that have arisen with regard to those bodies involved in land use planning. Issues discussed include the structure of public advisory bodies, the scope of an advisory process, support for advisory bodies, communications, and First Nations involvement.

Recent developments in Canada since the late 1980s suggest that growth in real wages in excess of the rate warranted by average labour productivity has acted to amplify fluctuations in employment and unemployment rates. This paper explores the linkages between these variables over the post-war period to provide a historical perspective on this issue. Section 2 examines whether there is statistical evidence of a long-run relationship between the real producer wage, labour productivity, and employment and unemployment rates. It studies whether deviations between the level of the real producer wage and average labour productivity persist in the long run, and if so, whether these deviations coincide with broad movements in employment and unemployment rates observed over the post-war period. Section 3 examines whether there has been a stable short-term relationship between these variables over the course of the business cycle.

Economic appraisals in transportation planning are significantly affected by the discount rate used in economic analysis of environmental goods. Traditional discounting practices may promote unsustainable outcomes by failing to account adequately for long-run environmental effects, but lowering the discount rate can introduce inefficiency and may not assist environmental protection. For sustainability, a discounting model is needed that includes intergenerational equity, correctly values the environment, includes allowance for risk, uncertainty, and irreversibility, and accounts for both the social rate of time preference and the opportunity cost of capital. This paper reviews some suggested approaches to discounting and describes the most recent and comprehensive theoretical discounting approach, which fulfils the above needs.

Summarizes recommendations of a task force established to develop standard methodology to value timber resources in Alberta. In developing its valuation approach, the task force reviewed various valuation methods and considered approaches used in other jurisdictions, and concluded with a general approach in which timber values should be measured in the context of a cost-benefit framework. Section 2 describes the benefit-cost framework and summarizes in general terms the types of value measurements that can be generated. Section 3 summarizes the legal and policy context relevant to the valuation of timber resources. Section 4 identifies a base case scenario against which the effects of alternative plans can be measured. Sections 5 and 6 provide specific details on two general categories of values (economic efficiency and distributional effects) and how they should be measured in the case of forest industries. An example of the application of the valuation framework is included.

This paper reconsiders several recently published but controversial results about the behaviour of exchange rates. In particular, it explores finite-sample problems in the application of co-integration tests and shows how these may have affected the conclusions of recent research. It also demonstrates how simple simulation methods may be used to check the robustness of co-integration tests in specific applied settings, and provides information on the potential sources of size distortion in these tests. Three case studies are presented: the literature on co-integration and prediction of nominal spot exchange rates spawned by Baillie and Bollerslev (1989); work on the long-run validity of the monetary model of exchange rate determination, particularly the contributions of MacDonald and Taylor (1993, 1994); and evidence presented by Kasa (1992) on common stochastic trends in the in-

Cette étude comporte six parties. Dans la deuxième, qui suit l'introduction, on présente la justification des subventions salariales, ce qu'elles sont, comment elles fonctionnent et qui elles peuvent cibler. Dans la partie trois, on explore les expériences relatives aux subventions salariales menées au Canada, aux États-Unis et dans d'autres pays de l'OCDE. Dans la partie quatre, on analyse les questions liées à la conception des subventions salariales, par exemple les configurations de base et l'interaction des diverses caractéristiques de même que la façon dont elles peuvent être mises en oeuvre et intégrées aux politiques existantes. Dans la cinquième partie, on présente un cadre pour la mise en oeuvre d'une expérience relative aux subventions salariales. Dans la sixième partie, on conclut par quelques réflexions sur les résultats que les subventions salariales pourraient produire au Canada.

Describes a study conducted to monitor the responses of a population of white sucker during the recovery phase of a lake acidification experiment in the Experimental Lakes Area of northern Ontario. In the study, white suckers were captured during spring and fall each year from 1984 to 1995. Data collected included fish weight, fork length, and age. Length-frequency histograms were constructed on a seasonal basis, and recruitment of young-of-the-year fish into the population each year is shown by following the progression of modes in the histograms from fall to the histograms of the next two or three seasons. Fish growth and condition factors were also calculated.

The purpose of this discussion paper is to examine and compare the existing legal framework for regulation of municipal water and wastewater systems in Alberta with alternative regulatory approaches. It first describes the regulatory framework under the Alberta Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, including the processes for environmental assessment and standards/regulations development, general prohibitions, approval and appeal processes, and abatement/enforcement processes. It then analyzes alternative approaches such as voluntary action, market-based instruments, and the performance/results-based approach. Finally, it provides details on Alberta's approach for regulating municipal waterworks, wastewater systems, and storm drainage facilities.

Summarizes findings of a review panel given the tasks of comparing the social costs of five short-listed independent power producer proposals originating in response to a request for proposals from BC Hydro in 1994. Begins with background on the BC Hydro request and a description of the five proposals, including two cogeneration projects at pulp mills and three small hydroelectric projects. This is followed by description of BC Hydro's own least-cost project for new energy supply, a repowering of the Burrard thermal plant. Chapter two discusses various methodological issues in the comparison, including Vancouver Island transmission credits, the social costing framework used, and the manner in which environmental costs and benefits are evaluated. The five proposals are ranked in relationship to that least-cost project and issues of project sequencing and premium price determination are discussed in chapter three. The premium price is that which is necessary to support BC Hydro acquisition of electricity from any project with lower social costs but higher corporate costs than BC Hydro's least-cost alternative. Concludes with recommendations based on the findings regarding the preferred project.

Des inquiétudes ont été soulevées au sujet de la faiblesse de la croissance de l'emploi suivant la récession de 1990-91, entraînant ainsi plusieurs observateurs à qualifier cette période de "reprise sans emploi". Ce document de recherche examine cette question à la lumière des derniers développements sur le plan de l'emploi et de la production et vérifie, au moyen d'estimations économétriques et de simulations d'équations d'emploi, si la faiblesse de la croissance de l'emploi au cours de la période 1991-95, peut être expliquée par la faible croissance économique, l'évolution des coûts salariaux, la restructuration industrielle, et l'évolution du coût réel du capital. Nos résultats suggèrent que la croissance des salaires réels, bien qu'ayant contribué à la faiblesse de la croissance de l'emploi au cours de la dernière reprise, n'a pas été le facteur dominant pour l'expliquer. Les résultats indiquent plutôt que la relation historique entre la production et l'emploi ne semble pas avoir changé lors de la dernière récession. La faiblesse de la croissance de l'emploi est surtout attribuable à la faiblesse de la reprise de la production plutôt qu'à une diminution de la capacité de l'économie à générer des emplois.

The conditions to which the metal must be exposed if localized corrosion is to occur are defined and the possibility of these conditions occurring during the proposed Canadian underground nuclear waste disposal scheme is discussed. A Retrospective Investigation of advanced western redcedar regeneration in the ICHwk1, ICHmw2, and ICHmw1 of the Nelson Forest Region, experimental project 1174

Several existing unmanaged stands in the interior cedar hemlock (ICH) zone of the Nelson Forest Region, British Columbia, are two- or multi-storied, with the lower storey consisting of advance western redcedar (Thuja plicata Donn.). A common managerial question is whether to harvest the overstorey and retain the understorey to develop the next crop, or to clear-cut, prepare, and plant the site. This report describes a field investigation conducted in the Nelson Forest Region to determine whether understorey western redcedar releases after harvest, and if so, to evaluate the relationships between site, stand, and tree characteristics. Data were collected at 16 sites, harvested at least 10 years ago, at which advanced cedar regeneration was left on site and was at least five years old at time of harvest. Where available, adjacent unharvested areas were used as unreleased controls. The results indicate the potential for using advanced western redcedar as part of future crops to reduce planting costs and avoid expensive site rehabilitation. BC FO PR SC

Returns to scale in the Canadian softwood lumber industry : an examination by mill size and region

By Evan Terry. Ottawa : Forestry Canada, Policy & Economics Directorate, Economic Studies Division, 1993. iv, 15 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Canadian Forest Service. Economic Studies Division ; 31)

After introductory sections on the structure of the Canadian lumber industry and on the literature on returns to scale in the lumber industry, this paper describes and presents results of a study that uses Statistics Canada data for 1984, 1986, and 1988 to make a general returns-to-scale analysis of Canadian sawmills and planing mills in Ontario, Quebec, and the British Columbia interior and coast. Calculations of cost are limited to those variables composing total variable cost. Shipment quantities and variable costs per 1,000 board feet are used to determine a returns-to-scale coefficient for those regions and years specified. Variable cost data by mill size, as measured by number of employees, are used to estimate that coefficient for each size class, region, and year.

RCA indexes are calculated for the forest product trade of 124 countries over a 21-year period (1970-90) and presented in the form of graphs for 48 countries and tables for 124 countries for the years 1970-72 and 1988-90. This is followed by a section reviewing the key issues and methodology used, including a case history of a possible farmed/wild salmon disease interaction which is referred to throughout the study. Subsequent sections review disease interaction for indigenous diseases; the introduction of exotic diseases by moving pathogens and parasites; and fish health management practices. Specific topics discussed in these sections include the effects of salmon farming on fish susceptibility to disease, transmission of fish pathogens and parasites, patterns of drug use in salmon farms, the environmental fate of antibiotics, and the relationship between antibiotic resistance in fish and human pathogens and antibiotic use in salmon aquaculture.

The purpose of this paper is to measure the extent to which the Canadian pulp and paper industry's long-term competitiveness could be affected by changes in timber supply levels and costs as a result of environmentally motivated policies. The scope of the study is limited to analysis of negative, environmentally-related shocks to timber supply (and assuming that timber supplies in the rest of the world are unaffected) on the supply side, even though some demand-side effects such as green consumerism should also be considered. The study methodology involves use of the North American Pulp and Paper Model, since most Canadian pulp and paper shipments are within North America. The nature of timber supply shocks and pulpwood supply characteristics are briefly reviewed, and model simulation results are presented for four scenarios (plus the base case of no shock) representing four different increases in the Canadian timber price. Simulations are 25 years in length so that the entire effects of the shocks are captured.

The project objective is to provide information on the ecology of high-elevation forests in the southern interior and the probable reaction of the most common ecosystems to a wide range of disturbance. The project site was logged in 1994-95 to create disturbances of various sizes, from single-tree selection to 10-hectare clearcuts, and using such treatments as burning and scarification. This report presents papers from a workshop presenting results from the project. Topics include harvesting costs and logistics, age and size structure of the Sicamous Creek forest, wind temperature regimes, forest pathology, beetle populations, lichen diversity, ecosystem mapping, litter input and decomposition, effects of alternative silvicultural practices, seedling establishment, forest regeneration, forest fauna, and woody debris.

Simulation estimates of the net employment impacts of six employment subsidy programs for long-term welfare recipients in Canada

Canadian policy makers are exploring the possibility of conducting a large-scale experiment called the Self-Sufficiency Project (SSP) that would test the effects of a generous employment subsidy program for long-term single-parent welfare recipients. This paper reports on the results obtained from using a microsimulation model to estimate the impacts of six alternative subsidy design options. The options include an earnings subsidy, a negative income tax with a work requirement or a minimum earnings requirement, a wage rate subsidy with or without a work requirement, and a proportional incentive program. Impacts evaluated include net employment effects and cost savings to social assistance programs. The model also tests the sensitivity of the estimates of the effects to a variety of assumptions regarding such factors as labour supply elasticity.

This report examines the history and social assistance reciprocity over a three-year follow-up period of a population of single-parent recipients eligible for the Self-Sufficiency Project wage supplement. Following a general overview of the earnings/social assistance picture for single parents on social assistance, the report addresses the following issues: how the income of pure social assistance recipients compares with those who mix employment and social assistance, and with exiters with employment earnings; the dynamics of the social assistance experience, and differences between eventual exiters and non-exiters in that respect; the prevalence of full-time work alternating with social assistance reciprocity; the progression over time of the earnings/social assistance mix for exiters and non-exiters, and whether prior experience of employment is a predictor of eventual exit; the degree of involvement of recipients in job training; and the later performance of those involved in job training, compared with those who have undertaken no training.

Ministry of Energy, Mines & Petroleum Resources ; 101 ISSN 0226-7497) ISBN 0-7726-3200-6 MICROLOG 97-06147 (3 fiche)

Skarns in British Columbia have historically been important sources of iron, tungsten, copper, and gold. This publication begins with an introduction on skarn terminology and the problems of skarn identification. It then reviews a genetic model of skarn formation and presents descriptive profiles of eight types of skarn deposits; describes the database of at least 735 skarn occurrences in the province, and the number and distribution of skarns in British Columbia according to their associations, class, age, and distribution; and notes the ages of British Columbia skarns and the total production of various metals extracted from British Columbia skarns. Subsequent sections provide information on assays and metal ratios of mineralized skarns, skarn mineralogy, skarn mineral chemistry, chemistry of skarn-related intrusions, and the mapping and evaluation of skarns. The appendix contains a listing of 735 skarn occurrences in British Columbia, giving deposit name, MINFILE number, latitude/longitude, elements and minerals present, and associated rocks and their ages.

This paper is based primarily on an analysis of the 1988-90 Labour market Activity Survey longitudinal data. The data provide an insight into the determinants of the employment rate of mothers with young children, as well as the dynamics of dependency on social assistance (including entry and exit rates). In this document, Section 2 discusses the policy issue and makes reference to related literature; Section 3 provides an overview of social assistance changes in Ontario and Quebec in 1988-90; Section 4 describes briefly the LMAS data and related methodological questions; Section 5 uses the LMAS data to examine the incidence of social assistance and entry and exit rates over the 1988-90 period; Section 6 explores trends in employment rates of lone mothers and mothers with a spouse; Section 7 uses the LMAS data to estimate the effect of social assistance benefits, labour market conditions, and other factors on the employment rate of lone mothers; finally, Section 8 summarizes the main conclusions.

This paper critically examines the potential social consequences of privatizing state retail liquor/beer outlets by examining the following issues: whether privatization leads to increased availability of alcohol; whether increased availability leads to increased consumption of alcohol; and whether increased consumption leads to increased social problems related to alcohol. Experience in other jurisdictions that had experienced privatization of state-operated liquor monopolies, such as Alberta and some US states, is reviewed throughout.

Describes a four-step method for quantifying the socio-economic impacts of motor vehicle traffic on pedestrians and cyclists. The method presented only concerns the transverse barrier effect, or the impact on pedestrians and cyclists attempting to cross a roadway. The methodology is derived mainly from a chapter of the Swedish National Road Administration's Project Analysis 15E (Reyler, 1986) but without the latter's requirement for the use of urban maps and with the incorporation of a trip movement model. Sample results are presented for cases in British Columbia.

This paper presents research using recent databases from over 2,000 water bodies to determine the pH (acid/alkaline) range of occurrence and regional pH minima for various aquatic biota (zooplankton, macroinvertebrates, fish, amphibians, and water birds) in southern Ontario. Multivariate logistic and linear regression models are developed to predict the occurrence and taxonomic richness of certain broadly distributed taxa for use in current national acid rain modelling efforts. The paper initially presents pH ranges for specific species and groups, and using these ranges, it develops a theoretical species richness or proportional response distribution for several taxonomic groups. Multivariate approaches are used to examine the important factors which affect distribution of certain species. Finally, the paper discusses how species richness, or the number of species in a taxonomic group, is affected by key factors such as pH, water body size, and dissolved organic carbon content.

La station spatiale remplira 3 missions: elle formera une base de recherches orbitale dans laquelle il sera possible d'étudier les effets de longs séjours dans l'espace sur la physiologie et le bien-être des humains; elle jouera le rôle de laboratoire de recherche de pointe, dans lequel il sera possible de commencer à mieux comprendre la gravité presque nulle, le vide presque parfait et l'absence d'interaction avec l'atmosphère; et elle sera un banc d'essai technique qui permettra d'apprendre comment construire, exploiter et entretenir des systèmes complexes dans l'espace. Cette publication donne le contexte et l'analyse des questions suivantes: la station spatiale; le programme canadien de la station spatiale; le système d'entretien mobile (SEM); le programme des technologies stratégiques en automatisation et en robotique (TSAR); et autres contributions internationales (le module-laboratoire japonais, le module pressurisé de l'Agence spatiale européenne).

The outline of this paper is as follows. The second section of the paper discusses a range of conceptual and practical issues relating to the measurement of structural unemployment at the aggregate level. The third section investigates the broad characteristics of the unemployed. The fourth section examines labour market dynamics to provide some insights into structural unemployment. The fifth section considers some of the shortcomings associated with using the standard definition of unemployment to measure the amount of slack in the labour market or the extent to which labour resources are under-utilized. The final section provides a brief summary of the main stylized facts that surface from the analysis. CA LA ND SS

L'objectif premier de cette étude est de remettre les secteurs de biens et de services en perspective. S'il est possible que la croissance accélérée du secteur des services soit due à une saturation des agents économiques pour la consommation des biens et à un appétit grandissant pour les services; il est également possible qu'elle soit due à un effet d'entraînement du secteur des biens sur le secteur des services. Le deuxième objectif de cette étude est de comparer la contribution à l'économie canadienne de sept ressources naturelles en terme de revenu et d'emploi en tenant compte des effets directs et indirects. Si les études intersectorielles sont fréquemment mises à jour pour un secteur de l'économie, il est moins fréquent de voir la contribution de différents secteurs évaluée dans un même cadre d'analyse. Les sections 2 à 6 de cette étude tentent de pallier à cette lacune à l'aide du modèle intersectoriel national de 1985. CA CO ND SS

The Structure of interest rates in Canada : information content about medium-term inflation

By Jim Day and Ron Lange. Ottawa : Bank of Canada, 1997. 28 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Bank of Canada ; 97-10 ISSN 1192-5434) ISBN 0-662-25787-1 MICROLOG 97-05744 (1 fiche)

This paper examines the relationship between the term structure of interest rates and future changes in inflation for Canada using a newly constructed par-value yield series. The theoretical framework for this research is the Fisher hypothesis, which states that nominal interest rates adjust one-for-one with expected inflation. After an introduction, the paper outlines the theoretical relationship between the term structure and future changes in inflation based on the Fisher equation and the rational expectations theory of the term structure of interest rates. This is followed by a brief review of recent research and description of the construction of the data set and properties of the data used in a basic model. Some economic problems are discussed and estimation results for the basic model are presented. Subsequent sections present estimation results for term-structure models that also include competing indicators of inflation and analyze the forecasting performance of the models. The final section summarizes the estimation results and discusses how the term-structure models may be used to monitor inflation expectations and to forecast future changes in inflation. The Self-Sufficiency Project (SSP) was designed to make employment more viable for many single parents. It offers to supplement the earnings of single-parent income assistance recipients who have received benefits for at least one year, if they leave the welfare rolls and take a full-time job. This report recounts the experiences of single parents in British Columbia and New Brunswick who were offered the opportunity to participate in the SSP. They told their stories in a series of focus groups whose purpose was to ask the central questions that underlie responses to the SSP supplement offer. After an introduction that describes the SSP and the focus group methodology, SSP recipient responses are summarized in chapters covering the following themes: the stigma of welfare and the value of work; feelings and issues associated with deciding whether to take up the offer of an income supplement; experiences in taking up the offer, and how the SSP changed lives; and future plans. Differences between those who participated in the SSP and those who did not take up the offer are also addressed. CA LA ND SA SS

Human Resources Development Canada ; R-96-16E) French ed. (Les Prêts étudiants au Canada...) : 97-05763/1. MICROLOG 97-05764 (1 fiche)

Presents results of an empirical investigation of student loan borrowing and repayment patterns of three recent cohorts of Canadian post-secondary graduates. The analysis is based on the National Graduates Survey databases, comprising three large, representative surveys of those who graduated from Canadian colleges and universities in 1982, 1986, and 1990, and include information on students' borrowing from government loan programs and the repayment of those loans. Graduates at the college, bachelor's, master's, and doctoral level are included. The following issues are examined: the proportion of students taking out loans; the amounts of those loans; the relationship between amounts borrowed and post-secondary earnings levels; how much is repaid in the years following graduation; numbers of graduates encountering debt load problems; characteristics and circumstances of those experiencing repayment difficulties; how those patterns vary by gender and level of education; and trends over time. Presents results of an empirical analysis of student loans based on the National Graduates Surveys, covering those who graduated from Canadian universities with a bachelor's degree in 1982, 1986, or 1990. The paper develops a simple model of student borrowing which incorporates demand factors and program eligibility rules, then specifies the following econometric models: a probit model of whether the individual graduates with a student loan; a specification of the amount owed at graduation, estimated for those with loans; a double-censored tobit model of the proportion repaid two years after graduation; and a probit model of the incidence of reported difficulties with loan repayment. Implications of the findings for an understanding of the student loan system and possible reforms, as well as for the gender results, are discussed. CA CO ED ND SS

This study of the human rights implications of psychological testing in employment and education begins with a review of psychological testing in general and methodological issues associated with test validation and reliability. It then reviews the situation of some of the legislatively protected groups most affected by testing and adverse impact discrimination. Affected groups not explicitly protected in human rights legislation are also discussed, including those with low income levels, low literacy skills, and those with neither English or French as their mother tongue. Controversies regarding test validity are reviewed throughout, with reference to case law in the United States and Canada. Canadian jurisprudence is discussed with regard to privacy protection, indirect discrimination and testing in employment, and classification and testing in special education and higher education. Recommendations made throughout the report relate to such matters as a central registry of information on tests, test validation, the relation between tests and employment requirements, and protection of minority students' equality rights.

A demand-side child care subsidy is an amount of money given to eligible consumers, such as low-income employed mothers of pre-school children, with some effective restriction that this money be spent on child care. A supply-side child care subsidy is an amount given to the supplier of child care services, whether a commercial business, non-commercial organization, or self-employed individual.

ual. This paper discusses differences in the effects of these two types of financial assistance, which type of subsidization is the most desirable, and identifies the links between public policy objectives and attitudes to the merits of subsidies to consumers versus subsidies to producers. Both structural and behavioural differences are examined.

Empirical supply functions are then estimated for each grade of wastepaper, using as the dependent variable the quantity of wastepaper supplied domestically to the Canadian pulp and paper industry. Results and discussion are divided into four parts according to the grades of wastepaper analyzed: old newsprint, old corrugated cardboard, old writing papers, and old mixed papers.

Taking the next step to stop women abuse : from violence prevention to individual, family, community and societal health : a practical vision of collaboration and change

This report suggests that recognition of violence against women as a health issue, as well as the central involvement and contribution of the health sector, is critical to bringing about change in order to eliminate violence. Evidence is cited regarding the use of health services by abused women and their desire for services to respond to their full range of needs, not those just directly related to abuse. A brief historical overview shows the evolution of the responses to women abuse across Canada, from a primary emphasis on treatment and intervention in the 1970s to a health promotion emphasis in recent years. The report then examines violence against women in the context of two approaches: one considering all conditions that contribute to health (a population health model) and another that looks at violence prevention as a critical issue for promoting health (a health promotion model). Some 30 projects funded by Health Canada are analyzed to explore what has been learned and what tools are available to meet current challenges.

Taxes, production and adjustment in the Canadian pulp and paper industry

This paper develops a dynamic model of the pulp and paper industry to characterize the determinants of output supplies and input demands, and to determine the effect of recent tax reforms on production. The model incorporates the most significant corporate tax instruments: the corporate income tax rate, the capital cost allowance rate, and the investment tax credit rate. Welfare effects of Canadian corporate tax reform are also determined, in particular the change in producer surplus relative to the pre-reform tax policy. In the section describing the model's empirical implementation and presenting estimation results, the existence of price-cost margins is investigated. This is followed by discussion of the nature of the effects of price changes on output supplies and input demands of the industry. The final sections examine characteristics of the industry's production process and the long-run effects on production and producer surplus arising from the first phase of the tax reform.

Treatment of acidic mine effluent generated at the Mount Pleasant Mine in New Brunswick is currently based on the introduction of lime directly into the drainage pipe without any prior mixing, an inefficient process. This report presents a technical and economic feasibility study on the incorporation of an acid drainage treatment facility at the mine site. Such a facility could include improved mixing through single or staged treatment in agitated lime mixing and/or reaction tanks, possibly with air sparging to further improve the liming efficiency. The study involved analysis of the drainage effluent, a series of bench-scale tests using Mount Pleasant acid mine water, and comparison of the liming costs in an improved mixing/agitation system with those of the current system.

L'objectif de cette recherche était d'élaborer une technique d'élevage de pyrales des cônes du sapin de façon à développer une colonie de laboratoire exempte de contamination. Cette technique a rendu possible la production en masse d'insectes et la récolte de données sur certains paramètres biologiques de cet insecte. Ces paramètres portent entre autres sur la caractérisation des stades larvaires ainsi que leur nombre, les temps de développement larvaire et la capacité de ponte des femelles. Par la suite, des insectes de différents stades ont été utilisés pour réaliser des épreuves biologiques afin d'évaluer la vulnérabilité de la pyrale au Bacillus thuringiensis var. L'utilisation de la concentration létale 50 % comme mesure du potentiel insecticide a permis d'identifier la vulnérabilité de l'insecte à la souche HD-1. Ces tests ont été faits sur les premier, troisième et cinquième stades larvaires. Aucune différence significative n'a été observée entre les stades larvaires pour ce qui est de leur vulnérabilité à cette souche de Btk. Grâce à cette étude, il a été possible d'identifier le Btk comme un outil potentiel de lutte contre la pyrale des cônes du sapin.

This report explores recent Canadian evidence of technological change and organizational change, and their impact on firms and workers. It examines recent trends in the Canadian labour market that might have roots in technological and organizational changes at the establishment level. The report reviews information from such studies as the Working with Technology Surveys that tracked the spread of computer-based technologies in Canada over the past decade; the Survey of Manufacturing Technology and the Innovation & Technology Survey of Statistics Canada; and the Human Resource Practices Survey that classified job changes into four categories. Observable impacts at the workplace level on firm performance and workers are noted and the resolution of these developments over the whole economy is considered. The final chapter discusses policy directions to support job-creating economic growth: fostering innovative workplaces, enhancing human capital development, and supporting workers in a changing environment.

An ever-growing number of non-smokers are much less tolerant of smoking, and anti-smoking activists have become very vocal in their opposition to the habit. Governments and other organizations have become more receptive to lobbying efforts and are introducing bans and restrictions on smoking. This document examines tobacco smoking in Canada.

To simplify the analysis, a classification system is used which categorizes the many possible tools and methods that are used in the determination of skill shortages into six basic groups: surveys, administrative data, help-wanted indices, model-based sector studies, and local labour market information. The paper analyzes each of the six categories sequentially for each country. The shortcomings and strengths of the Canadian system are then evaluated.

The first section identifies the relative importance of the domestic versus the foreign market for each product and discusses trends over time. The second section examines domestic consumption trends for each product and the role of imports. The third section reviews

This report documents an assessment of uppermost Cretaceous to Tertiary gas resources in the interior plains of the Western Canada Sedimentary Basin. The resources are described in terms of detailed geological play analysis and numerical assessment of undiscovered gas potential using a technique termed the discovery process model, which employs the volume and discovery sequence of individual pools or plays, within a natural population of pools or plays, to predict undiscovered potential. The analysis evaluated 12 mature and 2 immature established plays, and identified one conceptual play. The geology of the plays is outlined in a manner that can be used as a guide for exploration, and each play is designated by geological formation, reservoir, or trap type.

Upstream regulatory reform, positioning British Columbia natural gas for the future : a discussion paper

British Columbia. Resource Policy Branch. Victoria : The Branch, 1997. 11 p.
MICROLOG 97-06142 (1 fiche)

This paper explains the rationale for the British Columbia Ministry of Employment & Investment position that action must be taken now to create a competitive environment for all natural gas gathering and processing facilities in the province. Most of these facilities, which are owned by Westcoast Energy Inc., are regulated by the federal National Energy Board using an approach and methodology that is now inappropriate and contradictory to the natural gas sector's long-term health. The paper reviews the history of upstream gas regulation in the province and discusses problems caused by the development of a split federal/provincial jurisdiction over gas gathering and processing facilities. It then notes the need for regulatory reform with regard to co-ordination of federal and provincial regulation, pipeline toll methodology, risk sharing by gas shippers, and effects on gas resource development. Finally, options for reform are presented.

En Amérique du Nord, il y a eu, depuis trente ans, un changement radical d'attitude vis-à-vis l'usage du tabac. Une habitude, jusque-là jugée normale, est devenue de plus en plus inacceptable aux yeux de la société. Un nombre croissant de non-fumeurs sont devenus beaucoup moins tolérants vis-à-vis l'usage du tabac, et la voix du lobby antitabac s'est amplifiée pour dénoncer cette habitude. Les pouvoirs publics et d'autres organismes sont devenus plus réceptifs à ces pressions et commentent à imposer des interdictions et des restrictions à l'égard de l'usage du tabac. Ce document fait la lumière sur l'usage du tabac au Canada.

Wage subsidies are paid to employers to lower labour costs and encourage them to favour a target group in their hiring, thereby giving a competitive edge to the long-term or potentially long-term unemployed in the labour market. This study is a policy review of the issues relating to employer wage subsidies intended to encourage the hiring of unemployment insurance claimants. It begins with discussion of the rationale for wage subsidies: what they are, how they work, and who they target. It then reviews the policy experience of wage subsidies in Canada, the United States, and other Organisation for Economic Cooperation & Development countries. This is followed by exploration of issues related to wage subsidy design, such as basic design configurations and how subsidies could be implemented and also integrated with existing policies. A framework for a wage subsidy experiment is then presented, considering the four questions that need to be addressed in such an experiment. The study concludes with some thoughts on how well wage subsidies might work in Canada.

In recent years, the presence in Canada of individuals who may, as Nazis or Nazi collaborators, have committed war crimes in Europe 40 to 45 years ago has raised a number of issues, including: how many such individuals currently reside in Canada; how they came to be here; whether they should be the object of investigation and prosecution; and, if so, what means might be used to bring them to justice. Since no authoritative study of these issues existed, the Deschênes Commission was appointed in 1985 to investigate and report on the subject. This paper reviews the work of this Commission.

What factors determine structural unemployment in Canada?

The Canadian unemployment rate rose substantially during the 1970s and has fluctuated considerably since the early 1980s but has not declined on a sustained basis. This paper focuses on five structural factors that have drawn the most attention in the literature as affecting unemployment: minimum wages, demographics, the unemployment insurance program, unionization, and payroll taxes. The paper uses mainly descriptive analysis of the data and provides an overview of the existing empirical evidence to determine which of the factors can best account for Canada's unemployment experience. The analysis is restricted to the natural rate framework and the possibility of hysteresis and the issues relating to mismatch in the labour market are not considered.

Canadians have several possibilities to finance their retirement: saving entirely on their own with after-tax dollars or in tax-deferred savings plans, or relying on the Canada or Quebec Pension Plans. This book includes five papers on different aspects of the retirement challenge. The first two present very specific policy proposals, one that Canada Pension Plan funding be stepped up sharply and then gradually phased out in favour of a privatized plan, and the other that tax-deferred savings plans be replaced by a more general form of consumption tax. The book closes with three papers that provide background to the pensions debate: a look at the economic theory of transfers between generations, an examination of the effects of demographic changes on the Canada Pension Plan, and a discussion of six common misperceptions about the Canada Pension Plan.

Why is family market income inequality increasing in Canada? Examining the effects of aging, family formation, globalization and technology

Family market income inequality increased markedly in Canada from 1981 to 1993. Using an analogous inequality decomposition methodology formalized by Mookherjee and Shorrocks (1982) and adjusting for the effects of the labour market cycle, this paper sets out to decompose both the level and change in family market income inequality by age and family type in order to assess three possible explanations of that rise in income disparity. The methodology used can characterize changes in the distribution into three contributory components: contributions due to changes within group inequality, the contribution of the change in population shares to inequality, and the contribution to the changes in inequality due to changes in relative sub-group means.

A solution to the Canadian need for a rule-based mechanism to resolve trade disputes with the United States was found in Chapter 19 of the Canada-US Free Trade Agreement (FTA) and later Chapter 19 of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA). Chapter 19 allowed binational panels to review final anti-dumping/countervailing duty determinations in lieu of domestic courts. The purpose of this paper is to evaluate the merits of the system of binational panel review in FTA/NAFTA Chapter 19 in a Canada-versus-US context. It reviews the arguments for and against Chapter 19 with respect to such matters as standards of review, violation of constitutional rights, conflicts of interest, efficiency, fairness, and consistency of decisions. The paper defends the thesis that the Chapter 19 experience has confirmed that US critiques have been unfounded. The paper concludes with a number of modest policy implications for Canadian trade policy-makers. The appendix includes a summary table of Chapter 19 disputes. CA CO EX ND SS

For many young individuals (those aged 15-24), the transition from school to work means entering the labour market relatively unskilled, inexperienced, unfamiliar with job search and unaware of the job opportunities open to them. Consequently, many of them face the possibility of unemployment during their initial years as members of the labour force. Despite the relatively high level of public attention given to the issue of unemployment, this attention seldom addresses the various types of unemployment and their underlying causes. This paper attempts to do this with respect to present-day youth unemployment.

Determinants of each component are discussed, followed by a chapter on the importance of critical periods of development. Resources discussed include family income, parental time, parenting practices, quality non-parental child care, and family support programs.
